Eat What

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

Else you can't gain strength, nor can you strengthen your stomach if it is weak.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

But this food must be digested, and it must be digested thoroughly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today, and purchase a dollar bottle, and if you can honestly say, that you did not receive any benefits from it, after using the entire bottle, the druggist will refund your money to you without question or delay.

We will pay the druggist the price of the bottle purchased by you.

This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family.

We could not afford to make such an offer, unless we positively knew what Kodol will do for you.

It would bankrupt us.

The dollar bottle contains 2½ times as much as the fifty cent bottle.

Kodol is made at the laboratories of E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago.

We hear that Jacob Ginder has returned to the state institution for further care and treatment. He spent a few days with his family and relatives in his home neighborhood very pleasantly it seems.

Mr. Lorah, of Ray, it is said, made a visit to his son's recently for a short time. Mrs. Lorah has very poor health and spends most of her time living with her children.

Will Craun recently bought a colt of Levi Oberlin. It is to fill the place of the horse that recently died and although young will be fit for some work when it has been trained.

Mrs. Mumaw is reported quite poorly with but small hopes of improvement.

Mr. Hose is still on the sick list. His friends hope for his recoveroy soon, but feel much in doubt about it at this time.

Wm. Wilson and his sister, Mrs. Johnson, were callers at the fine country home of Henry Wilson northeast of Butler last Sunday afternoon. They report conditions in that neighborhood good.

Recently a farmer when in Butler caught three little girls striking his horse with small switches on its head. The man reprimanded the children and he says they made faces at him. Others have lately complained of the same matter and it would be well for the town officers and the parents of children in Butler to see that such things do not occur. Some people fear to leave their horses long on account of danger from this source.

It seems that Charley thinks that when a man leis his neighbor's wife ride with him to and from town it should be published in the paper. Right in some cases and wrong in others. All should be neighborly and ready to help in cases of necessity.

Warren Scoville is still unable to do much work or to get about much on account of an injury to one of his feet which occurred some time ago.

Last Sunday afternoon there was a Sunday school convention at Big Run church. It is said that the attendance was large and the interest in the work good.

The corn crop is likely to be nearly all planted this week. A great area of land is being put out and although the ground is now too dry in many fields it is mostly in good condition for a good crop.

Henry Smith, who was recently injured in Edgerton by being thrown from his buggy is slowly improving, but it was a close call.

William Wilson says that in his travels in Ohio lately he actually drove over a saloon, but he refuses to tell where it is located.

Peter Grube lately sold two steers to a buyer, of Bryan, O., that were the largest ever raised in Stafford township. They weighed 4,100 pounds and the price received for them was 7 cents per pounds or $287. This seems like prosperity for the farmer, but how about it being prosperity for the consumers of beef.

The condition of the growing wheat is much improved and with plenty rain in the next few weeks may be much better than expected when harvest time comes.

lies in a keen, clear brain, backed by indomitable will and resistless energy. Such power comes from the splendid health that Dr. King's New Life Pills impart. They vitalize every organ and build up brain and body. J. A. Harmon, Lizemore, W. Va., writes: "They are the best pills I ever used." 25c at Stone's drug store. 13-1m

Chas. Husselman, of Butler, met with a very painful and what may prove a very unfortunate accident Friday evening. He was at his home in company with two other gentlemen who were having a friendly scuffle with a piece of tin, a handle of some kind, and in the scuffle the tin was handled in such a way as to strike Mr. Husselman in the eye, cutting a gash in the sclerotic. The sight is uninjured, but his physicians are apprehensive lest a growth may result from the injury. He is obliged to have both eyes bandaged and to remain in a dark room. The injury is very painful. Mr. Husselman is a brother of Mrs. Frank Campbell of this city.—Auburn Dispatch.

CAN SHIP LIQUOR INTO DRY TERRITORY

The supreme court of the United States, in a case arising from New Albany, Ind., decided that a state can not regulate the shipment of intoxicating liquor into its borders, as that is entirely a function for the government to exercise, under the interstate commerce clause of the constitution.

A licensed liquor dealer at New Albany shipped liquor into Hart county, Ky., which is dry territory, and prepaid the express charges. The consignee was W. C. Tharp, a resident of Hart county. Tharp was in the habit of becoming intoxicated and the defendant's agent in Hart county knew this when he delivered the liquor.

The commonwealth of Kentucky brought suit against the company to recover a statutory penalty of $50 and the supreme court holds against the commonwealth.

Justice Brewer, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Liquor, however, obnoxious and hurtful it may be, in the judgment of many, is a recognized article of commerce."

The court lays down the following as the law on the subject:

"The proposition is well established that the right to send liquors from one state into another and the act of sending the same is interstate commerce, the regulation whereof has been committed by the constitution to congress and hence that a state law which denies such a right or substantially interferes with or hampers the same, is in conflict with the constitution."

"THEM'S AS AIN'T IDIOTS TURNS OFF THE TAP"

The true remedy against our trusts is to seek out the cause of a trust and to remove that cause. This is a perfectly simple and natural remedy, and lies close at hand. It applies to public matters the same rule of wisdom which men apply in their own affairs as to health, business, and every private transaction in the world. If typhoid fever or some other epidemic is sweeping over your community and you find that it results from sewerage or some other physical cause, you will remove the cause and not rely solely upon the skill and remedies of medical practitioners. Some visitors who were being shown over a pauper lunatic asylum inquired of their guide what method was employed to discover when the inmates were sufficiently recovered to leave.

"Well," replied he, "you see, it's this way. We have a big trough of water and we turns on the tap. We leave it running, and tells 'em to bail out the water with pails until they've emptied the trough."

"How does that prove it?" asked one of the visitors.

"Well," said the guide, "them as ain't idiots turns of the tap"—From "The Tariff and the Trusts," by Franklin Pierce, published by MacMillan Co.

Methodist Old People's Home

Members of the Methodist congregation will be interested to learn that plans for the old people's home at Warren will be ready in one week. In two weeks it is expected that work will be started and it is hoped to have the building erected by November 1. There are 300 acres in the farm which was donated as a location. The first main building, it is estimated, will cost $25,000, being of brick and two stories high. It is to be so arranged that the sun's rays will reach all parts of the building during the day.

There is to be one main section of the building, eighty-five feet long and thirty-five feet wide with a hallway down the center and at each end of this main building, is to be a section 120 feet long, with nine foot hallways, joined at the middle to the main building and giving the whole the appearance of a big letter I. The main section, including the wings, thirty-two feet wide each, will be in the two-story building, fifty-four to sixty rooms besides a reception room, parlor, sun room, dining room, etc., and the smallest room for sleeping purposes is 9x13 feet in dimensions.

Bomb Thrower at Work Again.

The bomb thrower who has been the Nemesis of Chicago gamblers for more than a year has resumed operations. His last attempt caused more destruction than any before and practically wrecked a building in the downtown district. The entire front of the first floor, which was occupied by a gas and electric light firm, was blown into the street. This is the thirty-first of a series of explosions. The object of the bomb thrower's last attack was a "whist club" on the fourth floor. As usual the mysterious thrower informed the newspapers by telephone that he had thrown another bomb.

Revenge for Liquor War.

Desire to obtain revenge because of the relentless prosecution of "bootleggers" by the Warren County Law and Order League is said to have been the motive for two criminal acts at Lebanon, Ohio. The large barn of Alfred Snook, chief detective for the league, was burned, causing a loss of $2,000. Snook was prosecuting witness in all bootlegging cases. An attempt was made to wreck a car of the Lebanon and Franklin tracion line, loaded with passengers, among whom were ministers and anti-saloon leaders. The car struck a bowlder, jarring the passengers and throwing them from their seats.

Boy Strangled by Closing Door.

With his head securely held by the weight of a heavy sliding door in the barn on the farm where he lived with foster parents near Marion, Ind., Lloyd Anderson, 6 years old, was found dead. Death was due to strangulation, and the indications are the lad struggled until he ceased to breathe. Two years ago Lloyd Anderson was kicked by a horse and his skull fractured, but in the face of the physician's verdict that he could not live he recovered, only to meet a worse fate.

Texas Hit by Tornado.

A tornado of great fury struck the little village of Zephyr, in the eastern portion of Brown County, Texas, and left a path of death and destruction seldom paralleled. The death list reached a total of thirty-two and the number of seriously and fatally wounded will reach fifty. The storm formed half a mile southwest of Zephyr and swept down upon the village, cutting a wide swath through the residence and business district.

Mad Cat Bites Children.

The victims are Lawrence and Lenora Meyer, respectively 4 and 7 years old, and Robert Elwell, 5 years old. The cat attacked other children and was later killed by a policeman. Two deaths have resulted and a number of persons have taken the Pasteur treatment since the rabies broke out at Elkhart early in the year.

Big Fire in California.

Two thousand feet of the Nevada grain docks at Port Costa, Cal., in which all the grain from California for foreign ports is loaded, was burned. The loss is estimated at more than $1,000,000. Nine hundred tons of grain and one hundred tons of hops were destroyed.

Enemy Kills 500 Peach Trees.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY SHOCKED BY A QUAKE

Jolt Pronounced Most Severe Ever Experienced Throughout the Territory Affected.

TREMOR FELT IN FOUR STATES

Disturbance Noticeable Over Wide Range in Middle States, but No Serious Damage Reported.

An earthquake, the first in several years, was felt in Chicago at 8:40 o'clock Wednesday morning, embracing many States in its range. From Springfield to Milwaukee and from Burlington, Iowa, to Kalamazoo, Mich., reports of the progress of the trembler kept wires busy in all directions. In Maywood, Lockport, Joliet, Riverside, Downers Grove, Hinsdale, Naperville, Elgin and Evanston distinct shocks were felt. No serious damage was reported at any point, however.

The progress of the quake seems to have been from south to north. The oscillation of the earth was recorded on the new weather bureau seismograph at Peoria at 8:38 o'clock. It was 8:40 when the trembler gripped the Federal building in Chicago and 8:45 when it was felt in Iowa. Various descriptions of the effects of the slight quake were given. Its duration was estimated at between five and ten seconds in Chicago, but outside the time was given in some places at half a minute.

Press dispatches brought a succession of accounts of the earthquake from Springfield, Peoria, Freeport, Aurora, Bloomington, Kewanee, Geneva, Streator, Dixon, Rockford, Moline, Ill.; Milwaukee, Janesville, Beloit, Wis.; Cedar Rapids, Dubuque, Burlington, Iowa; Kalamazoo, Muskegon, Mich., and many other points. Broken china and windows were reported from South Haven and Benton Harbor, Mich. Fires were believed to have been started by the disturbance in Aurora, but no losses were sustained. At Streator half a minute was given as the duration of the quiver of the earth, the shake being accompanied by a faint rumbling noise. Chimneys were displaced in Joliet where apparently were some of the most serious effects.

"The last earthquake of which the Chicago weather office has any record," said Professor Cox, "occurred at 5 o'clock in the morning of Oct. 31, 1895. Quakes are very rare in this locality, but no place is immune from the tremors occasioned by readjustments of the earth's surface. There is no seismograph in the Chicago office. It would be impossible to use such an instrument effectively in Chicago, for it must be removed from local vibrations and must be established on bedrock."

INDICTS GOV. HASKELL AGAIN.

Federal Grand Jury Returns New Bills in Land Fraud Cases.

Indictments charging fraud in the Muskogee town lot cases were returned by the United States grand jury in Tulsa, Okla., against Governor Charles N. Haskell, F. B. Severs, W. T. Hutchins, C. W. Turner, A. Z. English and W. R. Eaton. The accused men are charged with obtaining titles from the government to town lots in Muskogee by illegal methods. Bond in each case was fixed at $5,000 and was promptly furnished. This is the second indictment for Governor Haskell in the Tulsa case. The first bills were dismissed on a technicality. The fight before the grand jury had many sensational features. Numerous witnesses from Ohio and elsewhere testified.

ROB GOTHAM CAFE IN DAYLIGHT

Four Thugs Hold Up Twenty Customers, Collect $38 and Escape.

Four armed men invaded a restaurant at 444 7th avenue, New York, held up the twenty customers and after robbing two of them of $38 escaped. One of the robbers guarded the door, another covered the cashier with his revolver, while the two others with revolvers proceeded to rob the customers. The robbers searched two of the men and took what money they had. After warning the victims to make no attempt to follow them on pain of death, the robbers disappeared on the run. They are believed to be members of a notorious east side gang.

One man was killed and three others were overcome by gas from a leaky or broken pipe in the Illinois Steel Company's plant in South Chicago. One of the victims of the gas lost consciousness while performing valorous work in rescuing the other three, and for a time it was feared that his life would pay the forfeit.

Surrounded by her children and grandchildren, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe quietly celebrated her ninetieth birthday at her Beacon street home in Boston Thursday.

SENATOR BAILEY IN FIST FIGHT.

Texas Statesman and a Correspondent Have Mix-Up at Capitol

Senator Joseph W. Bailey of Texas and W. Sinker Manning, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, had a fist fight in the Senate corridor Thursday afternoon. Bailey used Manning's umbrella to wallop the scribe. Neither antagonist suffered any serious injury. The only damage was to the umbrella.

The clash grew out of an article in the Times under a Washington date line which said that Senator Aldrich, Republican leader in the tariff debate, had a number of followers among Democrats "who may faithfully be set down under the classification of 'Aldrich men'" and that "they are headed by that distinguished son of Texas, Joseph Weldon Bailey." Bailey read this story on the floor of the Senate and then denied the allegations. In making his denial he launched into a denunciation of newspapers in general and of the Times correspondent in particular, whom he specifically called a liar, a whelp and a coward. When Manning later met Bailey and started to explain that he did not write the article the mix-up came.

CHILDREN MADE TORCHES.

Five Burned Perhaps Fatally by Fire at a Commencement.

Five children who took part in the commencement exercises of Mrs. B. C. Boyd's school in Central City, Ky., on Monday night were burned, perhaps fatally, and the audience was changed from an applauding crowd to a fighting mob. Men in the audience covered the flaming children with their coats and thus saved them. Little Dorothy Clay was the unwitting cause of the fire. The children had formed in a circle and had drilled in their white muslin dresses. Then the lights were extinguished and a candle in the hand of each child flashed out. The audience applauded so enthusiastically that Dorothy became frightened and dropped her candle. The flame leaped to the white muslin, and in a twinkling five dresses were afire. Mothers fought to reach their children and the children made efforts to clamber over the footlights.

Jared C. Weed, cashier of the county treasurer's office in Buffalo since 1898, was arrested at his home on a charge of grand larceny of the funds of the county. The arrest was made on charges preferred by County Treasurer Fix, following an investigation which was finished the previous evening, Mr. Fix says, and on checking up it was found that the total of the alleged stealings since 1900, two years after Weed's appointment, were $36,550.18, ranging from a few hundred dollars to several thousands a year. Fix charges that another employe is implicated. Weed has made a statement to the district attorney confirming a confession made to County Treasurer Fix. Weed has turned over $20,000 in cash and Tax Collector Hofhein's real estate, etc., to the value of $15,000. In addition deeds conveying Weed's home to Samuel W. Hofheins and from Hofheins to Joseph Schaatner, trustee for former treasurers, were filed for record.

BENSON AGAIN IN PRISON SHADE

Californian Convicted of Land Frauds Is Refused New Trial.

John A. Benson, whose prosecution for alleged land frauds has occupied the federal courts for several years past, was placed again in the shadow of a government prison the other day when the United States Appellate court refused him a new hearing of the case in which he was jointly convicted with Dr. E. B. Perrin of conspiring to secure subornation of perjury in connection with California timber lands. Benson and Perrin were sentenced to a year in the Alameda County jail and a fine of $1,000 each. Perrin was granted a new trial on a writ of error, and when Benson's attorney heard of the action of the Appellate Court he announced his determination to present a motion for stay of mandate to allow time for appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

FOUR IN BOAT PARTY DROWNED.

Swift Current Capsizes Launch Returning from Picnic.

Four persons were drowned and four others rescued from a capsized gasoline launch which was carried through the sluice gates of the dam of the Consolidated Water Power Company of Grand Rapids Tuesday night and dashed to the rocks below. The drowned: Anderson, Miss Bessie; Bogoger, Miss B.; Forse, Miss May; Anderson, Ralph. The body of Miss Bogoger was the only one recovered. The party went up the river to a place on Big Island, called Love's Nook, for a picnic. Upon their return, in attempting to make a landing and not knowing the gates of the dam were opened, the swift current caught the stern end of the craft and all were carried to the river below. Four were rescued and resuscitated after much difficulty.

CLAIMS U. S. MISUSED LAND.

Daughter of Famous Song Writer Makes Complaint in Pittsburg.

Claiming that the terms by which her grandfather donated lands in Pittsburg to the government in 1812 have been violated, Mrs. Marian Foster Welsh, daughter of Stephen C. Foster, who wrote "Old Kentucky Home" and many other famous songs, is contesting the government's right to the use of the property. Part of the property to which Mrs. Welsh lays claim is the Arsenal Park. Mrs. Welsh claims that lands donated for an arsenal and "burial grounds for our soldiers forever," on condition that if used for other purposes they should revert to his heirs, have been put to other uses as a school site and a public playground.

NEGRO IS HANGED BY MOB.

Three Hundred Men Lynch Black at Pine Bluff, Ark.

Lovett Davis, a negro charged with attempting to attack a 16-year-old white girl in Pine Bluff, Ark., last Friday night, was taken from the jail at midnight by a mob of 300 men and hanged from a telegraph pole on one of the principal streets. Just as the negro was being raised above the street the rope broke and the body fell to the ground, but was raised again and left hanging. Early in the night the sheriff had secreted a number of heavily armed deputies in the jail, but they were overpowered and the jail was entered with sledge hammers. Several prominent men made speeches to dissuade the mob, but of no avail.

Five Are Killed Instantly, While Another Escapes Miraculously.

Of eight men who were in the Geesey hoop mill in Dowagiac, Mich., when the mill boiler exploded five were instantly killed, one died of his injuries, one was severely hurt and one escaped without injury, although the entire building tumbled about him. Among the dead are Deforest Geesey, owner of the mill, and his brother, Frank Geesey. A heavy rain at the time of the explosion prevented the destruction of the ruins by fire. The explosion threw pieces of wreckage in every direction as far as forty rods.

194 SAVED FROM SEA DEATH.

Woman Among Those Braving Dangers of Alaskan Coast Disaster.

With 194 survivors, including one woman, of the wrecked ship Columbia, the mail steamer Dora arrived at Seward, Alaska, Monday. The wreck occurred April 30 near Unimaka Pass. The experiences of all on the Columbia were harrowing in the extreme. There was no wind at the time, but a terrific surf was raging. On the vessel were Italians, Japanese, Americans and Scandinavians. All were passive and obedient in the face of danger, except the Italians, who were in a panic. These atttempted to seize the boats, but were restrained at the point of guns. At daylight the feasibility of a surf landing was established and the boats were given to the Italians. They made land. Two days later they returned for provisions and were compelled by revolvers to take only food and refrain from looting. Two former life-saving men, Christ Christopherson and Ernest Anderson, on that day succeeded in establishing a life line to the shore. On May 2 a storm caused the final abandonment of the wrecked Columbia. The same day the ship burned.

SLAYER OF MRS. GUNNESS?

American Sailor, Held in Norway, Says He Aided in Murders.

A young American sailor is under arrest at Frederikstad, near Christiania, Norway, as a self-confessed murderer. He told his captain that he helped Mrs. Belle Gunness kill four persons on her farm near Laporte, Ind., and that he then killed Mrs. Gunness herself. The man did not impress the captain as being insane, but as one forced by his conscience to tell the truth. The sailor is now under observation as to his mental condition. The case has been reported to H. H. D. Peirce, the American Minister to Norway.

TOWN GETS FIRST CHURCH.

Former County Seat Has Had Joss House as Only Place of Worship.

The corner stone of the Methodist church, the first Christian place of worship in Hawthorne, Nev., was laid Wednesday. A town of 1,500 persons, prosperous, formerly the county seat, and in the heart of a rich mining district, Hawthorne never has had a church. The only religious edifice has been a Chinese joss house, which was practically abandoned more than a year ago. Several years ago Goldfield succeeded in taking the county seat away from Hawthorne—one of the arguments being that "Hawthorne did not have a church."

Wheat Crop Is Promising.

Conditions are greatly improved in the wheat belts, according to a report made up at the Millers' National Federation, in convention at the Auditorium Hotel in Chicago. The report shows that on the whole a much better crop is to be expected than last year. The reserves are not more than half of what they should be, and this is what Patten based his prospects on.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

It was announced at Princeton Wednesday that W. C. Procter of the class of 1883, now of the firm of Procter & Gamble, soapmakers, has offered the university $500,000 if a like sum is raised for the erection of the new graduate school building on certain conditions.

At Charlottesville, Va., President Remsen spoke to the Virginia alumni of Johns Hopkins of the deplorable tendency to exalt the material equipment of our colleges. The rivalry between colleges for such elaborate equipment had evolved the begging college president, who was to be pitied.

Charles W. Eliot left the presidency of Harvard University finally and was succeeded next day by President Abbott L. Lowell. That evening the students assembled in front of Dr. Eliot's house and presented him with a clock in a mahogany case. After a short address the former head of the university for forty years led the students in a cheer for his successor. A retirement fund of $150,000 is being raised for Dr. Eliot by the Harvard alumni.

The latest attack upon alleged radical and revolutionary teaching in American colleges and universities is a series of reports now appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine by Harold Bolce, who made a secret itinerary of the principal institutions of learning, sometimes entering as a special student and at other places attending lectures. He asserts that in many classrooms it is being taught that the Decalogue is no more sacred than the syllabus; that the home as an institution is doomed; that there are no absolute evils; that democracy is a failure and the Declaration of Independence only spectacular rhetoric; that the change from one religion to another is like getting a new hat; that to social climbers children are incumbrances. Such is, in substance, the analysis of the writer's conclusions, given by the editor of the magazine.

With the coming college year a formal course in wireless engineering will be added to the engineering department of the Ohio State University. A full equipment will be installed, capable of communicating with points on the lakes.

ELECTION OF SENATOR ENDS LONG DEADLOCK

Short Story of the Great Illinois Battle Ending in Senator Hopkins' Defeat.

LORIMER'S RISE IN POLITICS

New Official Is Chosen in Springfield by the Aid of Many Democrats.

The deadlock on the United States senatorship, which ended Wednesday with the election of Congressman William Lorimer of Chicago, and which is without precedent in Illinois political history in many important particulars, began Jan. 20, when the first ballot was cast in joint assembly, Hopkins receiving 89 votes, Stringer 76, Foss 16, Shurtleff 12, and Mason 6.

Many attempts were made during the first month of the deadlock to break the Hopkins strength. Frank O. Lowden sent an agent to Springfield and maneuvered for a month in the hope of breaking in. William B. McKinley and Lawrence Y. Sherman were introduced as dark horses, but failed to get more than two or three votes. W. J. Calhoun enjoyed a brief period of mention. Edward D. Shurtleff, starting with twelve Republican votes, gained occasionally.

April and most of May passed without development. The second week in May William Lorimer began actively working for himself as a candidate for Senator, having Mr. Shurtleff's support, and claiming sixty Democrats.

Up to the ninety-first ballot, 135 men had been voted for during the deadlock, 114 being Democrats and 22 Republicans. Of the Democrats John C. Eastman received the highest vote, 43, outside of Lawrence B. Stringer, the regular nominee.

William Lorimer is a Republican and is serving his seventh term in Congress. He was born in Manchester, England, April 27, 1861, second son of a Presbyterian minister, and came to Chicago with his parents in 1870. His father died in 1871, leaving the family in straitened circumstances. Soon after his father's death young "Billy" began to earn a living. He worked his way from selling newspapers, shining shoes, through positions at the stock yards, and as conductor on the lines of the Chicago street railway to political control in the old Sixth Ward.

Seven Drown When Launch Capsizes

The gasoline boat Dorris, with ten passengers on board, capsized in the middle of the Yazoo canal near Vicksburg, Miss., and seven persons were drowned.

Work of Congress

The Senate Tuesday began the formal consideration of the sugar schedule, but did not approach a vote upon it. Instead, the time allotted to this schedule was entirely given over to speech-making, and strange to say, the two speeches on the subject, while made by Democrats, were in strong advocacy of a high tariff on sugar of all grades. The speeches were by Senators Foster and McEnery of Louisiana. Mr. Foster laughingly deprecated the application of the word "protection" to his attitude, but Mr. McEnery boldly espoused the protective theory and openly advised his Democratic friends to follow his example. He declared protection to be in the line of Democratic policy. The lumber schedule was temporarily put aside in order to permit the committee on finance to make changes in it.

For more than seven hours Wednesday the Senate was engaged in the discussion of sugar as that subject is involved in the pending tariff bill. Beginning with an effort by Senator McEnery, the Louisiana Democratic protectionist, there were four set speeches. Three of these were in support of the sugar schedule as reported from the committee on finance, while the fourth was a plea for material reductions. Senator McEnery made an earnest plea for stiff protection, not only because of the necessity for such a policy in the interest of the revenue, but because, as he declared, such a course would render the United States independent of other countries. He asserted that there had been a change of sentiment in the South on the subject of protection. Senators Burrows of Michigan and Smoot of Utah, both members of the finance committee, also spoke in support of the committee's action. The Michigan Senator charged the sugar trust with an attempt to establish a reputation for fair dealing by pretending to be in alliance with the beet sugar interest, which, he said, was not the case. He asserted that a reduction of duties would destroy the beet industry, and thus render it necessary to send $100,000,000 a year out of the country for sugar. Mr. Bristow, the new Senator from Kansas, was the only advocate of a reduced rate. He presented an amendment eliminating all reference to the Dutch standard in determining the grade of sugar. Referring to the attitude of the so-called "progressive" Senators, Mr. Bristow declared that, instead of wanting to destroy the sugar industry, they were the best friends of that interest, as they were of the protective policy. Their desire, he said, was to prevent graft and greed on the part of the trusts. The House was not in session.

By the decisive vote of 50 to 33 the Senate decided Thursday to postpone until June 10 the further consideration of the income tax question in connection with the tariff. Two amendments to the sugar schedule were debated. One eliminated the Dutch standard test from the tariff schedule and the other lowered the duty on refined sugar from 1.90 cents to $1.82\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound. On the first vote eleven Republicans voted with the Democrats for the amendment, on which the vote was 36 to 47. On the second only five Republicans broke ranks, the vote standing 32 to 53. Porto Rican affairs were again thrashed out in the House, the remarks being based on the bill taking from the Legislature of the island certain powers now vested in it and providing for other reforms which it is designed to inaugurate. The action of the Porto Rican assembly in refusing to pass the appropriation bill was characterized by Mr. Douglas (Ohio) as revolutionary. The Porto Ricans had as their champions Messrs. Martin (Colorado), Garrett (Tennessee) and Larrinaga, their resident commissioner. Mr. Martin protested against the Porto Ricans being made the servants of "a carpetbag government."

-:—:-

The senate Friday adopted the remainder of the sugar schedule and the tobacco schedule as proposed by the finance committee. Mr. Aldrich agreed that the sugar schedule should be taken up again later if Mr. Clay should desire to press his amendment cutting the duties in two. Senator Bradley of Kentucky advocated the removal of the internal revenue tax on "tobacco in the hand." Debate on the bill amending the organic act of Porto Rico was continued in the House. It was the expectation when the session began that consideration of the measure would be concluded, but the membership gradually dwindled away until there was no quorum, and final action on the bill was postponed. The principal speech was by Mr. Borland of Missouri, who upheld the Porto Rican house of delegates for refusing to yield its legislative rights and pleaded for a territorial government for the Porto Ricans. The House adjourned until Tuesday noon.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

A slight increase in trading defaults reported is unimportant in contrast with the substantial progress which appears in the volume of solvent payments through the banks. Weather conditions being more seasonable, there are now wider indications of activity in production and distribution. Ample moisture and higher temperatures advance the crops satisfactorily.

Farm reports generally carry much encouragement, there being healthy germination in late seeding, larger acreage of corn and spring wheat and sustained high prices for the breadstuffs.

Movements of commodities mainly reach more extended bulk, although flour and live stock have decreased. Retail trade now shows better, the buying entering broadly into lightweight apparel, footwear, food products and furniture. Sales are also improving in jewelery, art and music wares and sporting goods.

Wholesale operations make a stronger exhibit in dry goods, clothing, woolens and men's furnishings, bookings for summer and fall deliveries comparing well with this time last year.

NEW YORK.

Improvement is more in evidence this week, but irregularities in weather and crop conditions and ebb and flow movements in trade and industry prevent definite general characterization of the situation as a whole. House trade with jobbers and wholesalers is not usually active at this season, and efforts to attract business by clearance sales and liberal advertising have not been altogether successful.

There is a further apparent gain in the optimism with which the outlook for the more distant future is viewed, contrasting rather sharply with some of the reports indicating backwardness of demand for immediate consumption.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending May 27 were 205, against 219 last week, 263 in the like week of 1908, 142 in 1907, 127 in 1906 and 154 in 1905.

A TALE OF A CARAVAN

By Robert Buchanan

CHAPTER XIX.

The two men walked together through the darkness as far as the door of William Jones' hut; then they parted. Mr. Monk struck across the sand hills toward his own home, while Jones entered the door of his cabin.

He would fain have found that cabin empty, for the memory of the last scene in the cave was still upon him, and made him as nervous as a child. But the old man was there, and wide awake, and evidently pleased at his son's return.

"Where have you been, William dear?" said he. The question was innocent enough in itself, but it was full of hidden meaning for William Jones.

"Where have I been?" he repeated; "at work, to be sure!"

The tone of his reply startled the old man. He looked up, and saw to his amazement that William was as white as a ghost, and trembling violently.

"What's the matter, William, dear?" he asked, eagerly. "Have ye seen a wreck, my son?"

"No, I ain't," responded his son, violently; "and look ye now, old 'un, you jest be quiet, and let me alone, that's all!"

The old man, knowing his son's temper, did as he was told, and William continued to potter aimlessly about the room. He was certainly trembling very much, and was almost overcome with a nervousness for which he himself could not account. For he was no coward. To get possession of a prize on the high seas he would have faced a storm which might well make brave men tremble, not to mention that he knew that he had on more than one occasion humanely hastened the end of shipwrecked sailors, whom he had found and pillaged on the shore. After these acts he had been able to sleep the sleep of virtue without being haunted by dead men's eyes. But now the case was different. He had not to deal with a victim without friends, a man whose body, described as that of a "shipwrecked mariner," could be buried and forgotten without more ado. In all probability there would this time be a hue and cry, and William Jones trembled lest his share in the ghastly business might ultimately be discovered.

True, he was not actually the culprit, and so, even at the worst, he might escape the gallows; but to a man of his sensitive and affectionate nature the thought of transportation was not pleasant. It was this that made him nervous—this that made him start and tremble at every sound.

Presently a thought struck him.

"Where's Matt?" he asked.

"Don't know, William dear; she ain't been here for hours and hours. May be she's on the shore."

"May be she is—I'll go and have a look," returned William.

It must not be supposed for a moment that William Jones had become afflicted with a sudden and tender interest in Matt—he merely wanted to get quit of the cabin, that was all, and he saw in this a reasonable excuse for walking out alone. He accordingly made his escape, and went wandering off along the shore.

It was ten o'clock when he returned; he was still pale, and drenched to the skin. The old man was doting beside the fire, and alone.

"Where's Matt?" asked William again. "Ain't you seen her, William dear? Well, she ain't here."

William Jones did look a little uneasy this time, and it is but due to him to confess that his uneasiness was caused by Matt's prolonged absence. Erratic as she was in her movements, she had not been accustomed to staying out so late, especially on a night when the rain was pouring, and not a glimmer of star or moon was to be seen.

"Wonder what she's a-doin' of?" said William; "suppose I'd best wait up for her. Here, old man, you go to bed, d'ye hear—you ain't wanted anyhow."

The old man accordingly went to bed, and William sat up to await Matt's return. He sat beside the hearth, looked into the smoldering fire, and listened to the rain as it poured down steadily upon the roof. Occasionally he got up, and went to the door; he could see nothing, but he heard the patter of the falling rain, and the low, dreary moan of the troubled sea.

Hour after hour passed, and Matt did not come. William Jones began to doze by the fire—then he sank into a heavy sleep.

He awoke with a start, and found that it was broad daylight. The fire was out, the rain had ceased to fall and the morning sun was creeping in at the windows. He looked around, and saw that he was still alone. He went into Matt's room—it was empty. She had not returned.

He was now filled with a vague uneasiness. He made up a bit of fire, and was about to issue forth again in search of the truant, when all further trouble was saved him—the door opened, and Matt herself appeared.

She seemed almost as much disturbed as William Jones himself. Her face was very pale, her hair wild, her dress in great disorder. She started on seeing him; then, assuming rather a devil-may-care look, she lounged in.

"You're up early, William Jones," she said.

"Yes, I am up early," he replied, gruffly; "'cause why?—'cause I ain't been to bed. And where have you been?—jest you tell me that."

"Why—I've been out, of course!" returned the girl defiantly.

"That won't do, Matt," returned William Jones. "Come, you'll jest tell me where you've been. You ain't been out all night for nothing."

The girl gave him a look half of defiance, half of curiosity; then she threw herself down, rather than sat, upon a chair.

"I'm tired, I am," she said; "and hungry and cold!"

"Will you tell me where you've been, Matt?" cried William Jones, trembling with suspicious alarm.

"Of course I will, if you keep quiet," said the girl in answer. "There ain't much to tell, neither. I were away along to Pancross when the heavy rain came on; then I lay down behind a haystack and fell asleep, and when I woke up it was daylight, and I come home."

William Jones looked at her steadfastly and long; then, as if satisfied, he turned away. About an hour later he left the hut and walked along the shore, straining his eyes seaward. But instead of looking steadfastly at one spot, as his custom was, he paused now and again to gaze uneasily about him. At every sound, he started and turned pale. In truth, he was becoming a veritable coward—afraid almost of the sound of his own footsteps on the sands.

CHAPTER XX.

Several days passed away, during which William Jones showed a strange and significant affection for his own fireside. He went out a little in the sunlight; but directly night came he locked and barricaded the door as if against thieves, and declined, on any inducement, to cross the threshold. Even had a three-decker gone ashore in the neighborhood, he would have thought twice before issuing forth into the dreaded darkness.

For William Jones was genuinely afraid; his hereditary calm of mind was shaken, not so much with horror at a murderous deed, as with consternation that his lifelong secret had been discovered by one man, and might, sooner or later, be discovered by others. He did not put implicit faith even in Monk; it was his nature to trust nobody where money was concerned.

As to returning back to the cave until he had quite recovered his equanimity, that was out of the question. Even by daylight he avoided the spot with a holy horror. Only in his dreams, which were dark and troubled, did he visit it—to see the face of the murdered man in the darkness, and the hand of the murdered man pointing at him with cold, decaying finger.

The day after the murder he had been greatly unsettled by a visit from Tim Linney, who demanded news of his master, and said that he had not returned to the Caravan all night. Tim seemed greatly troubled, but gave vent to no very violent ebullitions of grief. When he was gone Matt sat by the fireside, and looked long and keenly at William Jones.

"What are you staring at?" cried he, fidgeting uneasily under her gaze.

"Nothing," said Matt; "I were only wondering——"

"Then don't go wondering," exclaimed the good man rather inconsistently. "You mind your own business, and don't be a fool!" And he turned testily and gazed at the fire. But Matt, whose eyes were full of a curious light, was not to be abashed.

"Ain't you well, William Jones?" she asked.

"I'm well enough—I am."

"It's queer, ain't it, that the painter chap never come home?"

"How should I know?" growled William. "May be he's gone back to where he come from."

"Or may be he's drowned? Or may be something else has happened to him?" suggested Matt.

"Never you mind him, my gal. He's all right, never fear. You go along out and play."

Matt went out as directed, and it was some hours before she returned. She found her guardian seated in his old place by the fire, looking at vacancy. He started violently as she entered, and made a clutch at the rude piece of ship's iron which served as a poker.

"Be it you, Matt? Lor,' how you startled me! I were—I were—taking a doze."

"I've been up yonder," said Matt.

"Up where?"

"Up to the painter chap's cart. He ain't come back; and the man is searching for him all up and down the place."

Fortunately it was very dark, so that she could not see the expression of her hearer's face. She walked to the fireplace, and, taking a box of lucifers from a ledge, began to procure a light, with the view of igniting the rushlight fixed to the table. But in a moment William blew the match, and snatched the box from her.

"What are you doin' of?" he cried. "Wasting the matches, as if they cost nowt. You'll come to the workus, afore you're done."

The days passed, and there was no news of the absent man. Every day Matt went up to the Caravan to make inquiries. At last, one afternoon, she returned, looking greatly troubled; her eyes were red, too, as if she had been crying.

"What's the matter now?" demanded William, who had left his usual seat and was standing at the door.

"Nothing," said Matt, wiping her eyelids with the back of her hand.

"Don't you tell no lies. You've heerd summat? Stop! What's that there under your arm?"

All at once he had perceived that she carried a large roll of something wrapped in brown paper. He took it from her and opened it nervously. It was the crayon portrait of herself executed by the defunct artist.

"Who gave you this here?" cried William Jones, trembling more than ever.

"Tim."

"Who's he?"

"Him as come looking after his master. The painter chap ain't found; and now Tim's going away in the cart to tell his friends. And he give me this—my picture; he give me it to keep. His master said I were to have it; and I mean to keep it now he's dead!"

William Jones handed back the picture, and seemed relieved, indeed, when it was out of his hands.

"Dead?" he muttered, not meeting Matt's eyes, but looking right out to sea. "Who told you he were dead?"

Matt did not reply, but gazed at William so long and so significantly that the good man, conscious of her scrutiny, turned and plunged into the darkness of his dwelling.

An hour later a loud voice summoned him forth. He went to the door, and there was Monk, of Monkshurst. It was the first time they had met since they parted on the night of the murder. Monk was dressed in a dark summer suit, and looked unusually spick and span.

"Where's the girl?" he cried, after a whispered colloquy of some minutes. "Matt, where are you?"

In answer to the call Matt appeared at the door. No sooner did she perceive Monk than she trembled violently, and went very pale.

"Come here, Matt," he said, with an insinuating smile. "See! I've brought something for you—something pretty for you to wear."

As he spoke he drew from his waistcoat pocket a small gold ring, set with turquois stones. But Matt still trembled, and shrunk away.

"I don't want it!—I sha'n't wear it," she cried.

"Nonsense, Matt!" said Monk. "Why, it's a ring fit for a lady. Come, let me put it on your finger."

So great seemed her agitation, so deep her dread of him, that she could not stir; so that when he approached, laughing, and caught her round the waist, he slipped the ring on her finger before she could resist. But it only remained there a moment. With a quick, sharp cry, she tore herself free, and, taking the ring off, threw it right away from her upon the sand. Then, with a wild gesture of fear and loathing, she rushed into the cottage.

William Jones walked over and picked up the ring, while Monk stood scowling darkly after the fugitive.

"What ails the girl?" cried the latter, pocketing the present.

"I dunno. She's never been the same since—since the painter chap went missing. I'm afeerd he turned the gal's head."

"He'll turn no more heads," muttered Monk under his breath; he added aloud and with decision, "There must be an end to this. She must be married to me at once."

"Do you mean it, master? When you spoke of it fust I thought you was joking."

"Then you were a fool for your pains. She's old enough, and bold enough, and vixenish enough; but I'll tame her. I tell you there must be no more delay. My mind's made up, and I'll wait no longer."

Sinking their voices, they continued to talk together for some time. Now Matt was crouching close to the threshold, and had heard every word of the above conversation, and much that followed it. When Monk walked away nad disappeared, leaving William Jones ruminant at the broken gate, she suddenly reappeared.

Curiously enough all her excitement had departed. Instead of weeping or protesting, she looked at William Jones—and laughed.

Monk had left his horse at the coast guard station. Remounting, he rode rapidly away through the sand hills in the direction of the lake. As he approached the spot of the old encampment, he saw that the Caravan had gone.

He rode on thoughtfully till he gained the highway, when he put his horse into a rapid trot. Just before he gained the gate and avenue near to which he had first encountered Brinkley, he saw the Caravan before him on the dusty road.

He hesitated for a moment; then hurried rapidly forward, and, arriving close to the vehicle, saw the Irishman's head looking round at him from the driver's seat. He beckoned, and Tim pulled up.

"Has your master returned? I am informed that he has been missing for some days."

Tim shook his head very dolefully.

"No, sir; not a sight have I seen of him for three days and three nights. I'm going back wid the baste and the house, to tell his friends the bad news. May be it's making fun of me he is, and I'll find him somewheres on the road."

"I hope you will," said Monk, sympathetically. "I think—hum—it is quite possible he has, as you suggest, wandered homeward. Good-day to you."

So saying, Monk turned off by the gate which they had just reached, and rode away up the avenue.

Tim looked after him till he disappeared. Then the same curious change came over him which had come over Matt after she had been listening to the colloquy between Monk and William Jones.

He laughed!

"MAKING GOOD."

Woman Who Sets a High Standard Makes Men Grow.

Alice Eames walked into the library, an open letter in her hand.

"Tom has written to ask me to go to the Junior Prom at Hillsover, mother," she said, and there was a queer little catch in her voice.

Mrs. Eames looked up from her book. "How delightful, my dear!" she cried, enthusiastically. "You've looked forward so much to going, I know, and now you shall have the prettiest gown we can plan together."

"But I'm not going," answered the girl, and the little catch had turned into a genuine sob.

"Not going!" exclaimed Mrs. Eames, in astonishment. "Why, what is the matter? Tell me! I thought you and Tom were such good friends."

"We were, mother!" cried Alice. "And it was something more, for at Christmas Tom told me he cared for me, and I promised—" her voice broke again. "But he's in with the swiftest set in college, Ted Lanham and Joe Grover and all those rich boys that were in prep school with him. I told him that he would have to break with them if he wanted me."

"What has he done now?" demanded her mother. "I had heard nothing."

"No, I didn't tell you," answered the girl. "I was so hurt that I couldn't. It was just the silliest sort of scrape, what dad would call sophomoric. A lot of his fraternity drove to Lebanon, and drank more than they should, and then had a general smash-up at one of the dance halls there. I heard something about it. I asked Tom, and he told me—straight. He never lies, you know. I was angry and disappointed, of course, and said so." Alice lifted her head proudly. "And that's all there is about it."

"Don't you think that you're a little hard on Tom, girlie?" asked Mrs. Eames, wistfully. "Aren't you going to give him another chance?"

"Yes, mother," replied Alice, firmly, "but not the chance of the girl who sells her forgiveness just for the sake of a good time. He'd despise me if I was like that, and I'd despise myself, too. I'm going up stairs to write him that I can't go!" And she walked out of the room, her head still nobly erect.

The letter, so hard to write, reached Tom as he sat in his uncle's study wrestling with the professor over an intricate bit of calculus, and his face dropped dolefully as he read it.

"When do you expect Miss Eames?" Professor Lee inquired, pleasantly.

For answer Tom held out the letter in silence; then, when his uncle had finished reading it, he said:

"It's all that fool Lebanon parade. No glad rags for mine this prom! Alice is great, I know, but she's the sort of girl that's dreadfully hard on a fellow."

"But that's the kind of a woman a man wants," answered his uncle. "It's the woman who sets standards almost out of our reach who makes us grow." The professor eyes softened as he looked across his study at the picture of a woman who had at once made his life hard and very, very beautiful for him. "'If Helen of Troy set the world at war, she made men heroes,'" he quoted slowly. Then he added, with a quizzical glance at his nephew, "Tom, it's up to you!"

"You're dead right, Uncle Ned!" cried Tom, a new light of determination coming into his face. "It's 'up to me,' and—I'm going to make good!"—Youth's Companion.

Viewing the Artistic.

The Artist—I saw you gazing at my painting entitled "Rebecca at the Well" for over twenty minutes. Were you admiring the beauty of the subject?

Learned Professor — Er — no, my young friend, I was just thinking what an insanitary age those people must have lived in to drink from a cracked jar and a moss-grown well.

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN

Threat of the Suffragette.

If you don't take our cause up—when your wife
It'll be the greatest plague in all your life!
'Twill be no use tranquillity to seek;
I'll have a washing day six times a week!
Upon your shirts I'll never sew a button,
And for your supper you shall have cold mutton.
Or if on pastry you should set your heart
I'll never make you pudding, pie or tart!
If you come home and bring a friend to dine
I'll go out—after locking up the wine!
If to your club at nights you choose to roam
I'll fetch you ignominiously home!
Whene'er you make a joke I'll never laugh;
Before you die I'll write your epitaph!
When wearied out, the day's work being o'er,
If you woo slumber, heavens, how I'll snore!
Or if I'm wakeful, how you'll curse those nights!
I'll lecture you—I will—on woman's rights.

Right Use of Mirror.

The women who are perpetually running after new hats and new frocks, dissatisfied with what they have got, and draining their purses, do not make a right use of their mirrors.

She who has sufficiently studied her complexion, her features, her hair, etc., won't make a mistake in the buying of a new hat; she'll spot her quarry in the "twinkling of an eye," and having got just the right thing, she won't be in a desperate hurry to change it for something new. There isn't any doubt about it that sacred little moments with Miss Mirror are an immense aid to economy. If one only had more time one would save many dollars, not to mention time and temper, for this is the sort of thing which happens. Every hat one possesses seems suddenly to have gone wrong—nothing will sit right on one's head—and off we go to scour the milliners for something more satisfying.

Well, we get the satisfying thing, and go home quite happy and smooth-tempered, yet perhaps very soon after take up one of these rejected miscreants, and, perhaps, with compassion, pop it on to see how it looks, when lo and behold! the flaw is found, that there was something wrong with the twist of the brim, or the angle of this wing, or that flower. We right the wrong, and suddenly the scene is changed, and the miscreant is every bit as becoming as, or more so, than the new purchase.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

East Indian hats are among the new articles of headdress.

Close, clinging styles have not yet received the expected setback.

The directoire sash is an effective feature of the majority of the narrow, clinging skirts.

The single psyche knot is in increasing favor for the coiffure as the party season advances.

New model gowns show a slight flare at the hem, otherwise they vary little from past styles.

The fan is more fashionable than for many seasons and usually echoes the color of the gown.

Plain cloth, combined with brocaded or embroidered velvet, is to be seen on new reception gowns.

For the later season the gown of old-fashioned flowered muslin is heralded as the top of fashion.

Collars must now meet in front in a straight up and down line; flaring corners are no longer permitted.

Pearled chiffons that look as if drops of dew had spattered them are the newest designs for evening gowns.

Of late there has been a turning from the long-used white yoke to lace and net yokes of the color of the gown.

The fancy arrangements of braids and bands over the bodice produces the bolero effect without its being a separate garment.

Most of the sleeves of elaborate gowns are of the same lace or net as the yoke, though there has been an effort to establish the sleeve like the gown.

The new corsets are very short from the bust to the waist line and remarkably long over the hips, a suitable style for large women.

One of the newest girdles is a waistcoat shape with turnback revers and topped by a lace jabot which falls from the throat to the top of it.

Directoire shoes are a fashionable accessory to accompany street gowns of that style. Dressy shoes for indoor gowns are also to be had in directoire style.

The value of clothes specially chosen with a view to hiding defects opens up a wide field of thought, for just as there are certain clothes to be avoided by tall women, and others to be adopted by short ones, so also can obesity or scragginess be hidden by properly-selected clothes.

Stout women will do well to avoid anything approaching ever-elaboration of design or trimming, all materials bearing horizontal bars or big checks; vivid colors must also be avoided, and it is an excellent idea to have skirts cut in long, graceful panels, if one would hide the effects of corpulence. Another precaution is to wear loose rather than tight-fitting clothes, and to keep the lines of the bodice as long as possible.

Scragginess is even easier to hide by means of properly-cut dresses trimmed with a profusion of frills, ruches, soft quillings of lace, etc.

Too thin arms can be hidden by adopting elbow sleeves made into drooping arrangements of lace, rather than short puff sleeves. In cases where the skin of the arms is red and coarse, it is an excellent plan to line all sleeves with a creamy tint of mousseline de soie over an inner lining of fine white net.

A big waist can be frequently reduced by a skillful dressmaker who avoids anything like a contrast at the waist, or by skillful folds, and careful fitting and boning reduce the appearance of a waist several inches.

Too great prominence of the bust may also be hidden by well-arranged bodices made on a fitted lining, and arranged so that the fullness is lost sight of. Prominent hips may be reduced and disguised by a well-cut corset and a skirt cut and designed with the idea of remedying the defect.

Round shoulders, which have not become too pronounced, may be hidden by a little careful arrangement and the skillful drapery of a fichu-like trimming. In short, there are few, if any, defects of the body that cannot be coped with and improved by a really capable dressmaker.

Sowing Fine Seed.

A lady who was just going to plant some poppy seeds, which were very small, put them in an old salt shaker; the task of sowing them was made much easier and they were sown evenly. This idea may be used with all small, fine seeds.

Cover Sewing Machine.

For those who own a drop-head machine an excellent plan is to make a slip of some soft material, for instance, velour, to fit leaf or top. It preserves the wood from scratches, etc., when the machine is in use, and serves as a cover when closed.

Take a Morning Walk.

Let a woman who has been working all the morning over the countless details of housekeeping put on her hat and go out for a brisk walk. If it is only for fifteen minutes it will do her untold good—her head will be clearer and her heart lighter. Time thus taken is not wasted, but the best kind of an investment, as she will find she can do much more in the long run.

Toothache Remedy.

A good remedy for toothache when the pulp (the soft nerve substance in the middle of the tooth) is exposed is a disk of cocaine. These disks can be bought ready for use. One or two should be taken up on the point of a needle, be carefully inserted in to the hollow of the tooth, and kept in position with a tiny plug of wadding. It is a good plan to get the chemist from whom they are purchased to apply them.

To Cover Hat Frame.

Cut the velvet the exact shape of the hat, allowing about half an inch for the turning of edges. Instead of sewing use liquid glue and proceed the same as in sewing. Next, cover the top of the brim, and, lastly, paste the facing in. It looks much better than when sewed, and requires less than half the time. Try it; you will be surprised and delighted with the result.

Acute Indigestion.

A good remedy for acute indigestion is an emetic. I am not speaking of chronic cases. One tablespoonful of mustard may be stirred in a tumblerful of warm water; and warm water should be taken freely after the emetic has been swallowed. Acute indigestion causes symptoms which affect the blood and make one fell ill for days.

Asking the Doctor.

A story is told of a lady, who, though quite comfortably off, hated to pay doctors their hard-earned fees. When her friends were ill she generally managed to get a copy of the invalid's prescription, and accumulated in time quite a respectable collection of unfailing cures. The lady caught a heavy cold, which none of her stored-up remedies would relieve, so she decided to visit a friend whose husband was a doctor. Arriving at the house, she found the doctor in his wife's drawing-room. "My dear doctor," she said, in her most insinuating manner, "what do you do when you have an obstinate cough?" The doctor seemed for a moment or two lost in thought; then, suddenly looking full at his visitor, he replied, tersely: "I cough."

Honey is said to be a good substitute for cod-liver oil.

A little ammonia in tepid water will soften and cleanse the skin.

Callous places upon the feet may be kept smooth by the use of the pumice stone.

Celery is a good nerve tonic. It also contains sulphur and helps to ward off rheumatism.

To take the soreness out of a soft, painful corn, try binding it up each night with baking soda, moistened with a little water.

An excellent home remedy for burns is pure vaseline. Olive oil will serve the same purpose. The point is to exclude air and dirt from the burned surface, and this either oily substance will do.

If the hands are large, do not wear tight sleeves. The pressure on the arms will make the hands swell. A tight wristband is as unbecoming to a large hand as a low heel is to a large foot.

Perspiring hands are an evidence of nervousness. It is good to bathe them often with white wine vinegar, afterward dusting them with powder of orris root. Persons suffering with such annoyance should dust their gloves with powdered chalk.

Physicians claim that sleep is more refreshing in a darkened room; therefore, it is best to have inside shades of dark green Holland under the ordinary shades. These are more easily adjusted than blinds. It is well to accustom children from infancy to sleep in the dark.

Stencilled Shirtwaists.

Instead of being embroidered the new shirtwaists are stencilled in the most charming designs and colors.

SUMMER CLOTHES FOR CHILDREN.

Sour Milk Crullers.

For a plate of crullers, beat one egg, add one-half cup of sugar, one-half cup of sour milk, one-quarter level teaspoonful each of cinnamon and salt. Dissolve one-quarter level teaspoonful of soda in a teaspoonful of water and add to the sour milk and other ingredients; then mix with flour until stiff enough to roll out. Roll out thin, cut in squares, and then in strips from one edge nearly to the other side, and fry in deep, hot lard. Drain, roll or sprinkle with sugar and serve hot or cold.

Steamed Prunes.

Wash one pound of prunes two or three times in warm water. Put them into an enameled stew pan with half a cupful of water. Cover closely and let them steam until the water is absorbed and the fruit swollen to its original size. Do not stir or break the fruit. When cool place in a glass dish and grate one-half the zest or juice of a lemon or orange over them, sprinkle with sugar and cover with whipped cream.

Bake Six Pies at Once.

In a No. 8 cooking stove put an ordinary size pie plate in the opposite corners of the oven. Then in the remaining corners, which will not be large enough for two more pie plates, place cocoa boxes, and then on top of these place two more pie plates, which then will be a little higher than the lower ones. Then put two more on the grate. In this way you can bake six pies at the same time and with the same fire.

Steamed Brown Bread.

Sift together two cups of corn meal, two cups of rye meal, one-half level teaspoonful of salt. Mix with one cup of hot water in which is dissolved a level teaspoonful of soda, two cups of sour milk, and two-thirds cup of molasses. Beat and pour into a buttered mold and steam five hours, or into one-pound baking powder tins and steam two hours. The smaller loaves save time and cut in good-shaped slices.

Devil's Food.

Boil together a half-cup of grated chocolate, a gill of milk and a half-cup of brown sugar. When thick, like rich cream, set aside to cool. Cream a half-cup of butter with a cup of brown sugar, add two-thirds of a cup of milk and two beaten eggs. Stir in vanilla flavoring and beat in the boiled mixture, then two cupfuls of prepared flour. Bake in layers and put together with a boiled frosting.

Potato Candy.

Boil a medium-sized potato, and mash very fine, without using milk or butter. When cold, add powdered sugar. At first the mixture will get very thin, but will thicken as you add more sugar. When thick, add chopped walnuts, if you wish, and mold into balls with the hands, pressing a halved English walnut on each side of the ball. Simple and good, and easy to make.

Breakfast Omelet.

Beat four eggs separately; add to the yolks one teaspoonful of flour stirred into a little milk; add a half teaspoonful of salt, a cup of warm milk, then the stiffly beaten whites. Pour into a well-greased pan and bake in a fairly hot oven for fifteen or twenty minutes. Serve with a cream sauce.

Egg Toast.

Beat well four eggs and cook slowly until thick and creamy in one-half cup rich milk which has been heated to the boiling point. Add one teaspoonful butter and one-third teaspoon salt. Place upon slices of freshly-made toast, dust with pepper and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Mashed Carrots.

Scrape and slice the carrots and boil tender, changing the water once and adding salt to the second water. Drain, rub through a colander and mash as you would potatoes, beating light with a large spoonful of butter and seasoning to taste. Serve very hot.

Boiled Custard.

Beat the yolks of three eggs well with two rounding teaspoonfuls of sugar and pour in two cups of boiling hot milk. Pour back into the double boiler and cook until it will coat a spoon when dipped into it. Cool and flavor with lemon or vanilla.

Jelly Strainers.

If when salt and flour bags are emptied you will put them in the clothes hamper to be washed and boiled out, you will always have a supply of jelly strainers. The salt bag is just the thing for the odd glasses of jelly made all during the season.

Sweet Potato Pie.

One cup of mashed sweet potato, one teaspoonful cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful each of salt and nutmeg and ginger, one-half cup sugar, one cup milk and one egg well beaten. Bake for one hour in a slow oven.

Supplement Vegetables.

It is impossible to thrive on vegetables alone; they must be supplemented by eggs, cheese, Italian pastes, such as macaroni, brown bread, good salad oil, butter, nuts, cereals, pulse.

Savory Breakfast Dish.

One large cup of calf's liver and bacon minced, half of a sweet green pepper cut fine; brown well in a large tablespoonful of butter. Break in four eggs and stir until eggs set.

Keep Eraser in Kitchen.

A felt eraser, moistened and a little laundry soap applied, is an excellent thing to remove grease and dirt from top and sides of kitchen stove or range.

Need of Taking Tariff Out of Politics Shown

WHILE it may not be very gratifying to the people who want cheaper lumber to note the wide division there is in the democratic party on the subject of free lumber as voiced by the vote in the United States senate, at the same time it will be gratifying to observe that the partisans divide among themselves and not on party lines on great economic questions. A few years ago it would have been utterly impossible to have division on a tariff schedule anything like that which occurred in the senate on the lumber schedule. Seventeen democrats voted against free lumber and ten democrats voted for free lumber. The division of the republicans was not quite so great, as thirty-nine republicans voted for a duty on lumber and fifteen voted for free lumber.

The vote was decidedly more interesting because the democratic national platform, while declaring for a great reduction of the tariff duties, was emphatic in its demand for free lumber, that being the only schedule specified in the document. That platform was adopted unanimously by the democrats and no one raised a dissenting voice against it.

The vote demonstrated, also, that men will vote for that which they think is of interest to their constituents, and are not going to be bound either by pledges in party platforms or by the old line doctrines which meant that every democrat should vote for a reduction of a duty wherever possible and the republicans should vote for an increase whenever possible. The vote on lumber ought to do more than anything else to take the tariff out of politics, and that is something that would be beneficial to the whole country.

It was observed that Senator Bailey pointed out that the division of the republicans on the lumber schedule marked the disintegration of the republican party. He asserted that when the republicans vote for protection on those articles which they produce and for free trade on those which they buy, it is the beginning of the end of the protective principle of the republican party. Bailey evidently is of the opinion that men ought to be consistent, and when they are protectionists vote for protection on articles which they do not produce as well as those which they do produce. Heretofore that has been the policy of the republicans, while the democrats have been voting consistently for a reduction of the duties without regard to the effect upon their own states.

It is difficult to say how Senator Bailey can apply the vote on the lumber schedule as marking the disintegration of the republican party without applying the same argument to the democratic party, as a majority of the democrats voted for a protective duty. It may be that he feels assured that other interests will hold the democratic party together, and that is true of the southern democrats. They may vote with the republicans for protection, but it is almost certain that as long as there is a race issue there will be no disintegration of the democratic party in the south.

It is a Fact

Knock and the world knocks with you,
Boost and you boost alone,
When you roast good and loud,
You will find that the crowd
Has a hammer as big as your own.

Buy, the gang is with you,
Rouig, and the game is all off,
For the lad with thirst,
Will see you first,
If you don't proceed to cough.

Be rich and the push will praise you.
Be poor and they'll pass the ice.
You're a warm young guy,
When you start to buy,
You're a slob when you haven't the price.

Be flush and your friends are many,
Go broke and they say "Ta-Ta,"
While your bank account burns,
You will get great returns,
When it's out, you will get the "Ha-Ha."

Be gay and the mob will cheer you,
They'll shout while your wealth endures,
Show a tearful lamp—
And you'll see them tramp—
And its back to the woods for yours.

There's always a bunch to boost you,
While at your money they glance,
But you'll find them all gone,
On that cold gray dawn,
When the fringe shows up on your pants.

The United Wireless Telegraph company will establish a station in Kendallville if business men there will give encouragement to the plan.

One hundred and twenty-one graduates from the common schools of Noble county participated in the twelfth annual commencement exercises in Albion on Thursday.

Plain Talks On

Peerless

WITHOUT A RIVAL

Woven Wire Fence

Where's the economy in buying cheap fencing every season, when you can pay a little more and get Peerless Fence, which will last three times as long.

"Cheap" fence is made to fool people.
It looks all right when it's new.
But when it's up—after you've paid your good money for it—then's when it begins to show its pedigree.
Sags and bulges wherever live stock have hit it, sometimes without anybody hitting it.
Rusts out, and breaks down. Uneven tension leaves some wires tight and some loose.
In short, it makes a farmer who takes pride in his place fairly sick of his bargain.
Now it is real economy to buy Peerless Fencing. While it costs a little more at the start, it lasts three times as long as the "cheap" kind, and looks good all the time.
Two things make Peerless Fence "without a rival."

The highest grade of hard steel galvanized wire—
And the way it's made.
Single piece cross bars, and the famous Peerless circular tie, insure strength, rigidity, and elasticity.
For your own good, we advise you to drop in the next time you are near our place, and let us show you Peerless Fence. We want to explain its merits more fully.

The Big Four from Wabash to Indianapolis has decided to disregard interurban competition and accordingly has boosted passenger rates.

An invitation has been extended to Governor Marshall to deliver an address at the old settlers' meeting in Angola in August. Senator Powers presented the invitation.

Prof. J. E. Sturgis writes us from Sharon, Pa., saying that he will return to Butler on June 6, and will go to Garrett on June 8 and 9, where he will have charge of the DeKalb county Sunday school convention, returning home on the 10th to be here during the summer. He will take charge of the Butler band and will also organize an orchestra of eighteen pieces and a large singing society. Sturgis is a musical genius and there will be some thing doing here this season.

The Best Pride.

Lord Granard, one afternoon during the Newport tennis tournaments last month, talked most entertainingly to a group of ladies about ancestral pride.

"Ancestral pride is an excellent thing," he said, "but there are better things. We have long felt in Great Britain that there are better things. I heard the sentiment rather neatly expressed last season by a duchess. Hers is a great family, but she was talking to a young marquis whose family is incomparably greater. He is a rather worthless, lazy, dissipated young marquis, and he boasted to the duchess about his people.

"'I am very proud of my ancestry, you know,' he ended.

"'Yes,' said the duchess, 'and you have cause to be, but I wonder how your ancestry would feel about you?'"

So light running that your "youngest" can now mow the lawn without help.

KEEN KUTTER Mowers are fast cutting and easy running because of the triple gear and the fine ball bearings. A KEEN KUTTER will last longer than any mower on the market and is easily kept keen and sharp. To sharpen, merely reverse the blades and they sharpen themselves. A cheap mower will cost more in the end on account of repairs, will not do the work properly and will require twice as much labor.

The KEEN KUTTER is a money saver, a time saver, a temper saver—and will keep your lawn looking like velvet.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Ever watch a bunch of men or boys running their hands through the beans, rice, hominy, coffee and other eatables displayed in open vessels in a grocery store? Makes the prospective purchaser and consumer wish they all use Pears soap or some other good brand. Then there are the pickles, honey and other products that enter the human stomach unwashed. An airtight case would scarcely keep them clean until they reached the table.—Stryker Advance.

Since the refreshing rains of the past week everything in the country has been growing by leaps and bounds. The grass is green and the oats and wheat are doing well, and the corn that was planted has begun to show in the rows. All the farmers have not planted all their corn, but the most of it is in the ground. But Saturday the plowing, which had been stopped for a few days, was resumed and on the high ground the soil was in fine shape to work. There is no reason why there should not be an abundance of hay and oats from present indications.

Some radical changes were made in the Winona schools last week when the old boards of trustees were dissolved and new ones elected. The agricultural institute will hereafter be known as the Winona College of Agriculture and J. C. Breckenridge, assistant manager of the assembly was elected president and W. O. Palmer was re-elected dean. The Winona college was also organized and Dr. Rigdon was elected the first president. The Park school has purchased the Kosciusko lodge on the south side of Winona lake which will be fitted with a gymnasium and laboratory. The school will have its own boats, tennis courts and grounds. Miss Rose Clark remains as principal.

During the thunderstorm of Monday evening the farm barn belonging to John Pepple, about two miles north of Auburn, was struck by lightning about 7 o'clock and together with most of the contents, burned to the ground. The structure was a frame one, 40x60, and had been built for a number of years. While the storm was raging fiercely, a heavy bolt of lightning came to the ground near the home, and Mr. Pepple's daughter, thinking that perhaps the barn had been struck, went out to look through it and returned to the house, seeing no indications of fire. In a short time, however, their attention was called to the barn in a mass of flames. The old driving horse and the faithful dog belonging to Mr. Pepple were burned with the building, together with some hay and corn. Two milk cows were taken out. The building was insured by the Farmers' Mutual, the exact amount carried we are not able to state. With the heavy clouds as a background, the fire made a great light in the north, and several from Auburn went out to the scene of the conflagration.—Auburn Courier.

The patent rights covering the manufacture of aluminum have expired and now the industry is an open one to any one who wants to embark in it. At the present time the output of the Aluminum Company of America is entirely sufficient to take care of the demand, and, having hydro-electric power and ample supplies of the raw material, it can increase its production should it be demanded.

One more useless organ of the human body is being held before the public eye. This time it is the tonsil, which is put in the same class with the appendix by the Illinois Homeopathic Medical association now in convention at Chicago. The doctors in papers and discussion have agreed that the tonsil is of no use and neither have they been able to figure out what it was ever good for. They also claim that the tonsils are veritable germ breeders, especially tuberculosis. Dr. Richard H. Street said that twelve per cent of the children were found to be infected with incipient tuberculosis. When the tonsils of these children were removed there was a complete recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Baker gave a pleasant surprise Saturday afternoon for their daughter, Mary, it being her fifteenth birthday. The afternoon was spent in games and contest. The prize winners were the Misses Ruth Chambers, Hazel Kenan and Ruth Hoffman. At the hour of five the fifteen invited guests were served with a three course supper. In the center of the table sat a large and beautiful birthday cake surrounded by fifteen lighted candles. Toasts were given by the Misses Opal Kenan, Ruth Chambers, Mildred Mumaw and Mabel Richard. Miss Mary received many beautiful presents. At the hour of seven the guests departed wishing Mary many more happy birthdays.

I received a letter the other day from Columbia City asking me to write a short essay on "Husbands." I am a husband which probably accounts for my being called upon to write about 'em. If I had never been a husband I'd probably be twins now. Husbands are a peculiar critter. All families have at least one husband among them, and husbands are quite different from married men. A husband has more authority in his own home than his wife's mother. A married man can't even call his pants his own. A married man sneaks to the stable to smoke. A husband stalks into the parlor with a cigar in his mouth and if his wife objects swats her over the head with the family Bible. Husbands were first invented for the amusement of the women folks. Married men were invented to henpeck. That's all I have to say just now. A coal man is coming up street with a coal bill that should have been paid last month, and I must dodge him.—Churubusco Truth.

In 1905 the value of buttons manufactured in the United States, as given in a special report of the Census Bureau, was $10,674 872 This was an increase of $3,564,709, or 66.5 per cent, over the value of the product in 1900 Of the total button product pearl buttons constituted nearly one-half (48 3 per cent), or $4,870,274 in value. Over two-thirds of the pearl buttons were made from fresh-water shells and the rest from ocean shells.

Mr. Sam Noragon, the well known coal and grain man, is the owner of a fine new automobile. He has become quite proficient as a chauffeur, but on last Sunday the auto got the best of him and came very near demolishing a wire fence along the farm of Marion Haverstock. Mr. Noragon was bringing a party of friends home from Hamilton when the machine commenced to "act up," and it required all his skill to prevent it from playing havoc with his neighbor's property. About four rods of the fence was mowed down and the rear axle of the auto was sprung. Happily no one was injured during the strenuous time.

Senator Elkins has invented a new phrase which is likely to be used quite frequently in the next campaign. He applies the name "spotted protectionists" to those who want a high tariff on things sold by their constituents and a low tariff on things bought by their constituents. His criticism is entirely justified—a man who wants protection must give protection. It can not be one-sided. The "spotted protectionist" is as inconsistent as the "spotted tariff reformer." The spots are, as in the case of deer, a sign of youth. They will come off after a while. A man must be all protection or all reformer—he can not be half and half.

A CONSTIPATION REMEDY FREE

There is no action of your daily life of greater importance than to see that your bowels move. They should move at least once a day naturally, and by that is meant without any help. If they do not move at least once a day you can consider yourself constipated and it is time you did something about it.

You will be glad to know there is a way out of the difficulty. Lemuel Landerdale, an old soldier at Quincy, Ill.; Elmer McMillan, of Speed, Mo.; Mrs. Monahan, of Stonewall, Miss., and many others were as you are now. But one day they awoke to the fact that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin was curing their friends, so they bought it too and it cured them. To-day, they are loud in praise of it.

What Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin did for them it should do for you. Surely your constipation is no worse than theirs, one of whom had it since '61. It only remains for you to realize that salts are of but temporary good, and what you want is a permanent cure; that purgative tablets, cathartic pills and such violent things make a great show of doing something, but do nothing that is lasting. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a scientific preparation, a laxative tonic, a mild syrupy liquid that contains ingredients that not only cure the constipation, but tone the intestinal muscles so that they learn again to work without help. A bottle can be bought of any druggist for the small price of 50 cents, and there is a dollar size for families who have already found out its wonderful value in stomach, liver and bowel troubles, in old or young.

Send your name and address to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent you so that you can test it before buying.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

A Cure for Hog Cholera.

Hog Cholera or Swine Plague as it is sometimes called is a highly contagious disorder.

When a hog shows any symptoms of this disease, he should be isolated at once and the pen fumigated in order to save the other hogs if possible.

Mix one part Sloan's Liniment with two parts milk in a bottle and give every sick hog a tablespoonful of this mixture night and morning for three days. Sloan's Liniment is a powerful antiseptic, kills the disease germs, soothes all inflammation and acts as a tonic to the animal.

A. J. McCarthy, of Idaville, Ind., says: "My hogs had hog cholera three days before we got Sloan's Liniment, which was recommended to me by a neighbor who was using it with success. I have used it now for three days and my hogs are almost well. One hog died before I got the Liniment, but I have not lost any since."

Mr. G. W. Balsbaugh, of Peru, Ind., writes: "I had four pigs that were coughing and were not doing well. I gave them some of Sloan's Liniment and they got better at once."

Sloan's book on Horses, Cattle, Hogs and Poultry sent free. Address Dr. Earl S. Sloan, Boston, Mass.

OF THOSE WHO WALK ALONE.

Women there are on earth, most sweet and high,
Who lose their own, and walk bereft and lonely,
Loving that one lost heart until they die,
Loving it only.

And so they never see beside them grow
Children whose coming is like breath of flowers;
Consoled by subtler loves the angels know
Through childless hours.

Good deeds they do; they comfort and they bless
In duties others put off till the morrow;
Their look is balm, their touch is tenderness
To all in sorrow.

Betimes the world smiles at them, as 't were shame,
This maiden guise, long after youth's departed;
But in God's book they bear another name—
"The faithful-hearted."

Faithful in life, and faithful unto death,
Such souls, in sooth, illume with luster splendid
That glimpsed, glad land wherein, the vision saith,
Earth's wrongs are ended.

Mrs. Hawkins' Neighbor

Mrs. Hawkins was sitting in her room in the married quarters in the barracks:

It was such a tidy room that it looked almost starved. She had a dust-pan in one hand and a brush in the other, and with rather heightened color she was sweeping up her husband's footmarks as he tiptoed over the red felt carpet to the door.

She was quite young, and would have been quite pretty also if the corners of her mouth had not turned down rather peevishly, and if there had been a [illegible] of hair out of place or a speck anywhere about her to show that she was human.

Her husband, standing in the scullery, continued the conversation in rather a doubtful voice.

"Mrs. Smith went to hospital this morning."

"Indeed!" in an icy tone.

"She's got a tidy lot of children, and, after all," desperately, "she's a neighbor."

"A neighbor! You don't call every person who happens to live next door a neighbor, I hope?"

"Well, why not?" said Hawkins, brushing imaginary specks hastily from his scarlet sleeve, because he saw his wife's eye fixed on it. "I don't know who's your neighbor if Mrs. Smith isn't—and she has seven there, and the cripple—if," and he hesitated again, "our's had lived, Maggie,"—but Mrs. Hawkins' eyes suddenly filled with tears.

"Henry, you know I can't bear it," she said. "It would be quite different

if it were our own. I've never been able to bear the sight of children since."

"Maggie, I'm sorry."

She set down the brush deliberately. "You speak as if I was a monster," she said, brushing away her tears. "I don't hold with gadding. I keep myself to myself."

"Well, you might do worse," said Hawkins, and then, as he opened the door and stepped out, "but I don't say as you mightn't be more neighborly."

Mrs. Hawkins took up her brush and dust-pan again and swept up his last tracks over the scullery floor, and then she stirred the fire and put the sauce pan to one side and settled down for the morning.

Covering the whole table with a curious medley of things—empty straw bottle cases, sheafs of colored paper, tidy bundles of baby ribbon—deftly and neatly, with needle and silk and gum, she began constructing all sorts of dainty trifles out of her materials, and tried to feel as happy and superior as usual. But she could not forget Hawkins' words. It almost seemed to her as if the little feet that might have been pattering about the empty room were there beside her! Once or twice she half turned to the corner where the cradle used to be.

Outside a droning noise was audible—a tirssome, reiterated noise that at last became so worrying that she got up from the table and opened the window and looked out. There, just beneath her, on her doorstep—her sacred, clean, red doorstep—sat a dirty, untidy little boy, quite the most disreputable little object she had seen for many a long day. One thin leg was cased in iron, and on his lap he was nursing a little collection of rabbits' tails. Mrs. Hawkins' mouth went down more than ever, and she was just going to bang the window down, when the child turned a pale little face up to her.

"Good morning, missus," he said, in a very baby voice.

"Get off my doorstep," said Mrs. Hawkins. He got up obediently, holding the rabbits' tails firmly. The seat of his patched trousers was covered with red. He looked up with a tentative smile.

"Mother's gone to hospital," he said, presenting his excuse.

"Oh, indeed! And who are you?"

"I'm the next door boy, missus."

"And when were you washed last?" said Mrs. Hawkins, with irony.

"Father washed us all Saturday," he said, seriously. "Mother was bad and her hands were full she's took baby with her. Father hadn't time to do me this morning—only the ones as go to school."

"Well, your face is a sight, child!"

"Could you wash me, missus? I'd be a deal comfortabler."

Perhaps in no other way could his appeal have reached Mrs. Hawkins' heart. Her love of soap and water was a passion. She leaned out and looked him over.

"Well, come in by the scullery as careful as you can," she said, "and leave those horrid things outside. I'll wash you."

It sounded almost like a threat, but he did not appear to notice it. His little face beamed.

"I'll be a deal comfortabler," he repeated.

At first she stood him on a chair by the sink, and turned up her sleeves, and soaped a flannel; but he was so small and so unsteady on his iron boot, that she took him on her knee at last, with the basin on the chair beside her, and commenced operations; and when it was all over, and his little face clean and sweet, he put up his arms quite naturally and kissed her, rubbing his soft cheek against her as a kitten might have done.

"You are kind, missus," he said.

Mrs. Hawkins' arms were still round him, and she could not move her face away without an effort that might have rebuffed him. She was saying over to herself the words that she had said so often: "I keep myself to myself;" and for the first time they sounded rather meaningless.

The child moved about the room as she tidied up, following her in and out, and gazing in speechless admiration at the treasures on the table. When everything was quite clean she did not send him away, but set him on the chair beside her; and together they planned, and fitted, and designed, and tied the ribbons into gorgeous bows round the waists of the straw bottle holders. Never had any artist a more appreciative audience; but when 12 o'clock struck he was out of the chair in a minute and making for the door like the veriest Cinderella.

"Father gets back by 12," he said, "and he gives us our dinner."

Mrs. Hawkins paused while one might have counted ten, and then she spoke.

"Will you stay and have a nice dinner with me?"

"No; oh, no," a trifle breathlessly. "I don't know how to be neat and clean—not like you say. I'll learn, perhaps, but you wouldn't want me if you saw me behave."

And Mrs. Hawkins was surprised to feel that she was disappointed.

But that was not the end. When once you have opened your heart to admit your neighbor, you have to be always providing more accommodation, until every corner of it is full.

By the time Jimmy Smith was washed and dressed every morning, and the other children brushed and sent off to school, it was time for the little lessons that were to teach him to read to fill his empty day and be such a surprise to his mother when she was well again. There was really very little time for fancy work, so all the pretty trifles were bundled unceremoniously into a drawer, and, by and by there were secret measurings, and the thimble and needle and cotton were brought out again, and little pinafores and frocks began to grow under Mrs. Hawkins' nimble fingers—and sometimes there were so many dusty feet pattering in and out of the immaculate kitchen, that it seemed a waste of time to clean up after each inroad; and the day Mrs. Hawkins said to her husband, "Oh, it doesn't matter, Henry, leave it till night," was a distinct crisis in her life. So also was the day when she met him on the threshold looking very pretty and sweet and young, and pointed to the open door in and out of which children seemed to be swarming like bees.

"Mrs. Smith has come home," she said. "Jimmy is so excited. I dread his being tired—sometimes when he is overtired he cannot sleep."

"Couldn't we ask him in to tea?" said Hawkins, awkwardly. He was rather afraid of saying the wrong thing.

But Mrs. Hawkins beamed. "I think it would be neighborly," she said.—London Christian World.

YACHTS A THIEF'S HOBBY.

Man Sentenced in London Had Remarkable Career as Pirate.

It seems rather surprising that the London papers this morning had so little about the remarkable criminal career of Frederick Murray, or Sylvester, who was sentenced at Old Bailey, only brief summaries of the trial being printed, a London dispatch to the New York Herald says.

The story of his career is certainly sensational enough. He seems to have had a particular belief in the value of yachts—that is, other people's yachts—as the headquarters for crime.

Thus at the age of 15 he had set up in a yacht at Greenwich as a pirate, living on what he procured by theft from the river barges. In 1900 he was sentenced to two years' penal servitude at Chelmsford. On his release he stole a well-appointed yacht and committed burglaries in various parts of London, using the yacht to hide the stolen property.

He was eventually caught, and after a succession of sentences he returned to the river with still another stolen yacht. He went about armed, and when next caught was sentenced to five years' penal servitude with three years' police supervision.

While serving this he made the acquaintance of a convict named Stevens, who was serving ten years. On their release he and Stevens set up on another yacht on the river, and after a long run were caught again at Grays. Murray escaped from the Grays police station, but was caught and then escaped from Dartmoor while serving his sentence, but was caught again.

He was released in November, 1908, and went straight back to the Thames, and, buying a yacht, the Silver Spray, had thoughts of using it as a coiners' den. He got the plaster of paris and metal on board, but eventually abandoned the idea and threw the plaster and metal overboard.

When the police found the yacht and were waiting on board for him to turn up he abandoned it and stole another, the Elsie. Then he stole the Eve as his next enterprise. The latter was a good-sized, quick sailing yacht, and he loaded it with stolen property and raced down the river, intending to get to the continent, but had a collision with another boat and just managed to swim ashore.

THE COBRA STONE.

A Ceylon Story About the Reptile and Its Shining Lure.

Everyone knows that Ceylon is famous for the amount of queer and rare precious stones found in the sands of its dried-up river beds. Among these is one called "chlorophane," a rare variety of fluor spar, which shines at night with phosphorescent light. There has long been a tradition among the natives that a certain species of cobra makes use of this stone to attract insects in the darkness. Indeed, the name given it is "naja-kaller," or cobra stone. A scientist resolved to test this wonderful story during a stay in the island, so offered any coolie 5 rupees to point out a stone carrying cobra. In about a week an old Tama came in and offered to show him one. He followed this guide, and, sure enough, there, under an immense tamarind tree, he saw a little point of steady greenish light and could faintly distinguish behind a cobra coiled and slowly waving its head from side to side. It would have been desperately dangerous to approach the reptile, and the coolie begged him not to do so, saying that next night he would himself get the stone. He did so, and in rather clever fashion. Before dark he climbed into the tree, carrying a large bag of ashes. After nightfall the cobra turned up, as usual, and deposited its treasure, which it carried in its mouth, before it. Thereupon the coolie emptied his bag of ashes over the shining object, and the frightened reptile, after a wild but fruitless search, crept back into the jungle. The coolie descended, searched the ashes, found the stone and received his promised reward.—London Telegraph.

The Advance Notice.

A volume might be collected of innocent but barbarous perversions of the English language. The latest comes from the projectors of a new Siamese newspaper, who have distributed the following notice:

"The news of English we tell the latest. Writ in perfectly style and most earliest. Do a murder git commit, we hear of and tell it. Do a mighty chief die, we publish it, and in borders of sombre. Staff has each one been college, and write like Kipling and the Dickens. We circle every town and extortion not for advertisements. Buy it. Buy it. Tell each of you its greatness for good. Ready on Friday. Number one.

Scottish Miner's Wit.

An amusing comment was made by a miner at an ambulance lecture in Elphinstone, East Lothian. The lecturer had stated that if suffocation from choking was likely to ensue the simplest remedy to give relief till medical aid arrived was to take a fine pointed penknife and make a small incision in the throat. One of the miners then shouted: "Ye dinna ken Elphinstone folks. If I was to try that the morn here's what wad happen: If that man died his folk wad hae me prosecuted for murder, and if he got better he himself wad be the first to prosecute me for cutting his throat."—Dundee Advertiser.

The Talkative One.

Nearsighted Guest (at banquet)—I presume the next thing will be a long and tiresome speech from some talkative guy. Man Sitting Next—Oh, I suppose so. I'm the talkative guy that has to make the speech.—Chicago Tribune.

Asking Too Much.

Jenks (ringing up the theater gets the wrong number)—Can you let me have a box for four to-night?

Bones (the undertaker)—I'm afraid not, sir. I only make 'em to hold one.—Tit-Bits.

We have noticed that when it is generally said of a man that he doesn't work very hard, it may also be said that he doesn't get along very well.

Smiles of The Day

One of the Regulars.

During the encampment of several regiments of British soldiers in a certain district the wood and turf used for cooking purposes were carted by the neighboring farmers. One day a donkey cartful of turf was brought in, the driver being a country lad. As a regimental band was playing he stood in front of the donkey and held the animal tightly by the head. Some of the "smart ones" gathered round, highly pleased, and the wit of the party asked why he "held his brother so tightly."

The reply was crushing: "I'm afraid he might enlist."—Argonaut.

Just Had To.

Mrs. Bronson—I can't understand how the Browns are able to own an automobile.

Mr. Bronson—They aren't, but he's so hard up at present that he can less afford not to own one.

Looking Ahead.

She—And what did papa say?

He—He was very pleasant about it. He even urged me to have the wedding take place as soon as possible.

She—That's strange. Did he give any reason?

He—Yes; he said he thought weddings would cost more next year.

Investing His Profits.

"What are you going to do with the money you get for your crops this year?"

"I guess I'll git one o' these here centaurs I read about in a book to run the new carriage I bought last year."

"Why, a centaur is an imaginary creature."

"Well, this is an imaginary carriage."—Washington Star.

The Lost Chord.

Monsieur Rouvier—A beautiful organ music I have heard this afternoon.

Mrs. Watkyns—Yes.

Monsieur Rouvier—It was indeed charming. I have asked somebody the name of it. What was it then? Ah, yes, I remember myself—"The Mislaid String."—Somerville Journal.

Ready for Hostilities.

Dinks—Why do pugilists shake hands when they go into the ring?

Winks—For the same reason, I suppose, that two women kiss when they meet on the street.

Proverbs Disproved.

"Then you don't believe seeing is believing?"

"Nix, I see lots of people I would not believe."

Matter of Shape.

Bosh—Isn't it queer that a printed sheet, although square, is called a circular?

Josh—Not necessarily; it is intended to go round.

Become Recruits for the Pulpit.

Inquisitive Party—Do you know what becomes of very wicked little boys?

Johnnie (who has been to a revival meeting)—Sure. Dey reforms 'em, an' makes preachers of 'em when they grow up.

The Natural Thing.

"Wheat is going up."

"Well, isn't wheat the natural thing for the production of dough?"—Baltimore American.

The Spirit of the Law.

Judge—You are charged with being the leader of an organized band of pickpockets!

Prisoner—Well, yer'll have to impose a fine on the corporation den, yer know; yer can't punish me personally!—Puck.

Natural Inference.

Jerry—Sam is wrapped up in his auto.

Harry—When did the accident occur?

A Slow One.

He—What would you say if I should steal a kiss?

She—Well, I'd have to admit that you were improving.

His Scheme.

Applicant—Give me a position as proofreader—we'll get along all right.

Magazine Editor—What do you mean?

Applicant — Well — whenever you make any mistakes in the magazine, just blame it on me, and I'll never say

An Even Break.

"Can I offer you a little friendly advice?"

"If you'll take a little in return."

Here negotiations ceased.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Annual Observation.

Man loves the language of surprise,
You hear, each year, the same old thing
'Mongst people counted weather wise:
"It is a most unusual spring."
—Washington Star.

Couldn't Wait.

Green—Oh! well, I believe Shallowpate is pretty sure to get ahead in time.

Wise—I know, but he needs one right now.

Sounds Foreign.

Mrs. Gottcash—When the count proposed to your daughter weren't you in ecstasies?

Mrs. Gadder—I can't quite remember the name of the place—those towns in Europe have such funny names, don't you know.

Couldn't Then.

"I would like mightily to enjoy riches."

"Then why don't you try to marry 'em?"

"As I said, I want to enjoy 'em."—Kansas City Times.

"Say, paw," said little Sammy Short, "Mr. Silverton told me to-day that I was a second edition of you."

"That was nice of him," rejoined old man Short. "How did he come to say it?"

"I struck him for a quarter," answered Short, Jr.

Higher Education.

Little Willie—Say, pa; what is the higher education?

Pa—The higher education, my son, is one that teaches a young man that he must work in order to earn an honest living.

One or the Other.

"It is a good thing to hunger for fame," remarked the struggling author.

"Yes," assented his friend, the artist, "if you don't get the fame you are sure to get the hunger.

Misunderstood.

Agent—Madam, could I sell you some pen pictures of American financiers?

Mrs. Wayside—No. I can look in the papers and see the pictures of those that are in the pen. Haven't you any pictures of those that are free?

The Reason.

Mr. Wise—My boy's all right now.

Dr. Emdee—My medicine cured him, eh?

Mr. Wise—No; he heard that the circus would soon come to town.

The New Cook.

Small Lady (looking rather nervously at her new cook)—Did you have words with your late mistress as you were leaving your last place?

The Cook (encouragingly)—Not in the least, mum. I locked her in the bathroom and took all my things and slipped out as quiet as you please!—Pearson's Weekly.

Real Fighters.

Rodrick—The war of the revolution was long fought, but our forces finally won.

Van Albert—Yes, but it would have been won six months sooner if the D. A. R.'s could have only been there.

Sensible Realization.

Quinn—Where is the young poet these days?

DeFonte—Doing well. Always has a dollar and wears a new suit. He's realized something.

Quinn—Sold some of his poems, eh?

DeFonte—No, realized that he is not a poet and got a job as bookkeeper.

Viewpoints.

Poet—Isn't it a shame the way those vandals are blasting away the beautiful Palisades?

Business Friend—I should say so. Why, that was the finest place in the world to paint ads!—Puck.

Convenience.

"Dat new neighbor has his place arranged mighty cozy an' convenient," said Miss Miami Brown.

"Yas'm," answered Mr. Erastus Pinkley. "Da's 'bout de mos' convenientes' place I knows of. He's got de chicken coop right next' to de back fence an' de watermelon patch nex' to de chicken coop."—Washington Star.

Cynical Interpretation.

She (sentimentally)—It means a great deal to a girl of Emma's nature to marry a man like Dick.

He (brutally)—Naturally. He is a man of means.—Baltimore American.

Call of the Times.

Now in the land is heard that cry,
Which no ear careless passes by,
But which to answer all men try,
"What's the score?"

Now watch the one whom business keeps
Away from games until he weeps;
Upon all with the query leaps,
"What's the score?"

The broker, of great dignity,
The clerk and lesser employe,
The office boy—on this agree:
"What's the score?"

The lagging hours creep on apace
Until the newsboards one can face,
Or till spectators tell with grace,
"What's the score?"

A mania 'tis which comes with spring,
And gets itself in everything,
Why, e'en the little birdies sing,
"What's the score?"

'Tis useless this to ridicule,
Say to a maniac he's a fool,
He'll answer, to your insult cool,
"What's the score?"
—Baltimore American.

Civil War Stories

In Bad Taste.

There was unveiled at Andersonville, Ga., a monument of Capt. Henry Wirz, of the Confederate army. The monument was erected through the efforts of the United Daughters of the Confederacy of Georgia. There are many Georgians who commanded regiments and divisions who have not been honored thus. They have been passed by to commemorate a captain who is remembered only because he was in command of a prison camp where 13,000 Union soldiers are buried and because he was hanged after having been found guilty by a military commission of having conspired to injure the health and destroy the lives of the prisoners in his charge and of having murdered some of them in violation of the laws and customs of war.

A saner view can be taken now of the Andersonville question than was possible in 1865, when Wirz was executed. The Confederate government was willing to exchange man for man till the prisoners it held. It would thereby have strengthened its armies, prolonged the war, and added to the number of its victims. Since that would have been the result an exchange was refused.

It was easier for the North to care for prisoners of war than it was for the South. As a matter of military necessity the Confederates had to care first for the soldiers at the front. So poor were their transportation facilities that the men in the trenches at Petersburg were often on short rations. This may be urged in mitigation of the inadequate supply at Andersonville, but with a little more energy the prisoners could have been better fed.

The prison guard was small and made up largely of half grown boys. There was the ever present fear of a concerted outbreak by the prisoners. That fear explains, while it does not justify, some of the crimes charged against Wirz. It was his misfortune that he was in no way qualified to fill so trying a position. He could in several ways have bettered the condition of the prisoners without being false to his duty, but he could not see it, or, if he did, he refused to act.

If Wirz were to be tried to-day allowances would be made for his difficult position which could not be made in 1865. He would not be sent to the gallows, but he would not escape punishment. Even admitting that he ought not have been hanged, the United Daughters of the Confederacy cannot make a hero or a martyr of him. He never showed a vestige of sympathy for the brave men who were in his custody. He was an unfeeling and sometimes brutal jailer. As this is the best history will condescend to say of him, and as there are thousands of homes where his name is odious, the Daughters of the Confederacy were guilty of poor judgment and bad taste in giving him a monument. The South should disown him and ask that his name be forgotten.—Chicago Tribune.

Woman Led Cavalry Raid.

Mrs. Sarah E. Thompson, who performed highly meritorious service for the Union cause during the Civil War, died in Washington on Friday, April 23d, as the result of injuries received in a street car accident.

The deceased had the distinction of being the only woman in the country drawing a pension as a soldier of the Civil War. She was a native of Tennessee, but through the Rebellion was loyal to the Union. She discovered the hiding place of the Confederate leader, Gen. John T. Morgan, and immediately gave the information to the general commanding the Federal forces, then, at the head of a battalion of cavalry, led the way to the rendezvous, where, in the fight that followed, Morgan was killed. For her services in the war Mrs. Thompson received high praise from Gens. Grant, Rosencranz, Sherman and other Union commanders. She was employed by the army as scout and spy in the southwest, rendering service upon the rolls as a soldier. Her first husband, Col. Scott, organized a regiment of loyal men through the Confederate lines to join regiments elsewhere.

Many years ago Mrs. Thompson was appointed to government office through the influence of Senator Pritchard of Tennessee whom she had befriended when he was a barefoot boy, and who never forgot her goodness and kindness. In the department where she was employed she was beloved by all for her kindly and gentle nature and was familiarly known as "Mother" Thompson.—Washington Star.

Reminiscences of the War.

The ageing, mellowing begentled men, survivors of two armies of the long ago—armies that wore coats of a different color, but whose members are American citizens, all of them now—are modestly handing to the world the choicest, truest bits of history made in the most notable civil war of any time. They are going it at gatherings in post, legion and camp; at social meetings, in home circles, with tongues and pens. Some day men will carefully collect these thousands of choice morsels, these leaves from memory's books—leaves upon which were printed pictures, scenes and facts born of the great contest—ship-shape them and make history that will stir and inspire all men, women and children who read it, north and south.

As he that lives longest lives but a little while, every man may be certain that he has no time to waste. The duties of life are commensurate to its duration, and every day brings its task, which, if neglected, is doubled on the morrow.—Bollear.

One of Great Britain's cruisers of 9,135 tons has penetrated the heart of South America by making a voyage of 1,000 miles up the Amazon to Manaos, and continuing thence nearly 1,500 miles farther, to Iquitos in Peru, within 600 miles of the Pacific coast.

Origin of the Corset.

The Corporation of Glovers and Staymakers of Paris has just celebrated the seventh centenary of its industry with a banquet and ball. The origin of the corset is essentially unaristocratic. A butcher in the thirteenth century had a talkative wife, who was, in addition, something of a virago. To reduce her to silence he imprisoned her body in the first pair of stays. Wives have imitated and improved upon the idea of the thirteenth century butcher, but stays and silence have ceased to be synonymous. As lately as two centuries ago they were forbidden in France in churches, at the King's Court when the King was present, and in the courts of law. In the first part of the eighteenth century they almost passed out of fashion, but Paris followed London in such matters, as it does to-day, and when in 1839 it was known that the London dandies wore six different kinds of gloves each day, the fashion returned to Paris, and has never left it.—Dundee Advertiser.

FEARED AN OPERATION.

Found a Wonderful Cure Without It.

James Greenman, 142 East Front street, Ionia, Mich., says: "What I suffered during the worst sieges of kidney trouble, I can never express, it was nothing short of torture. In bed for three months, with terrific pain in my back, an awful urinary weakness, dizziness, nervousness and melancholy. I rapidly lost 45 pounds. My doctor advised an operation, but I would not submit to it. Gravel was forming and the urine had almost stopped. I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and after taking one box passed a stone half an inch long. I kept on taking the pills and passed smaller stones one after another until forty had been ejected. I recovered rapidly then and was soon as well as ever."

"I suppose you know, barber," said Percy, with a wink at the man in the other chair, "that the hair on a man's head grows at the rate of three-millionths of a yard in a second."

"No, I never heard that before," said the barber, beating a tattoo on the strop with his razor; "but I know there's a spot on the back of your head where the hair wouldn't grow as much as that in a million years."

Eastern Colorado offers the best inducements to settlers at the present time of any part of the country. Land equal to that in the older states can now be had from $10.00 to $20.00 per acre. Crops of all kinds that are raised further east are raised there. Hundreds of farmers in the older states are selling their high priced lands, and investing where the prices are advancing rapidly. Lincoln County is one of the best Agricultural Counties in the state. W. S. Pershing of Limon, the County Surveyor, who has surveyed the lands for the U. P. Railroad and the Government for the last twenty years, is familiar with the whole country, and is assisting many to secure good locations. No part of the country offers better inducements to settlers or investors at the present time than Eastern Colorado.

Too Great a Strain.

Every once in a while the actor while taking the part of a dude in a play would spend large sums of his stage money. On one of these occasions it seemed too much for a certain person in the audience, when a voice rang shrill and clear through the house: "Hey, Bill, how about that five you owe me?"

TORE HIS SKIN OFF

In Shreds—Itching Was Intense—Sleep Was Often Impossible—Cured by Cuticura in 3 Weeks.

"At first an eruption of small pustules commenced on my hands. These spread later to other parts of my body, and the itching at times was intense, so much so that I literally tore the skin off in shreds in seeking relief. The awful itching interfered with my work considerably, and also kept me awake nights. I tried several doctors and used a number of different ointments and lotions, but received practically no benefit. Finally I settled down to the use of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, with the result that in a few days all itching had ceased and in about three weeks' time all traces of my eruption had disappeared. I have had no trouble of this kind since. H. A. Krutskoff, 5714 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., November 18 and 28, 1907."

THE TRAMP QUESTION.

What We Can Do to Repress a National Nuisance.

George T. Slade, general manager of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, says, in comment on the ever-present tramp question:

"The camps of vagrants are to be seen at bridges and water tanks all along our main line, and vagrants are seen riding on our passenger and freight lines in every conceivable place where they can catch on and be for a time undetected by the trainmen. In many cases there are so many vagrants on a train that it is hazardous for the trainmen to attempt to put them off. These vagrants pilfer cars, set fires along the right of way, occupy empty equipment set out on passing tracks, often building fires inside of the cars which cause conflagrations, use the company's material for the construction of small shanties which are often fired, terrorize the occupants of section houses in isolated localities, and commit the various usual depredations known to this type.

"If we can once realize that vagrancy is a serious and costly problem in our country, we shall begin to take sterner measures for its repression. Some persons may not be too friendly toward the railroads, and yet all agree that if, as one prominent railroad man recently said, tramps and vagrants cost the railroads of the United States $25,000,000 a year, vagrancy is a question too important to neglect longer. What vagrancy costs in public and private charity, in almshouses, workhouses and jails, on the road, in communicated diseases, and in bad examples and strong temptations to the young, no one can compute; yet the aggregate cost in money and in life must be very great.

Day after day appear reports of the arraignment of boy tramps before magistrates in many of our American cities. What can we do? Several things are simple and effective. We can refuse food at the door. We can make work a requirement for a subsequent meal. We can urge that vagrants receive reasonably long sentences when arraigned before magistrates, if they are evidently habitual vagrants. So far as possible co-operation ought to be maintained between railroad police and city police. Unless tramp trespassers upon the railways are convicted when arraigned in court, the railroads have little power to reduce railway trespass. City police should not tolerate evident vagrants upon the streets of the city. We should endeavor to obtain, when possible, more adequate vagrancy legislation. The maintenance of committed vagrants should be a State charge.

OVER THE FENCE.

Neighbor Says Something.

The front yard fence is a famous council place on pleasant days. Maybe to chat with some one along the street, or for friendly gossip with next door neighbor. Sometimes it is only small talk, but other times neighbor has something really good to offer.

An old resident of Baird, Texas, got some mighty good advice this way once.

He says:

"Drinking coffee left me nearly dead with dyspepsia, kidney disease and bowel trouble, with constant pains in my stomach, back and side, and so weak I could scarcely walk.

"One day I was chatting with one of my neighbors about my trouble and told her I believed coffee hurt me. Neighbor said she knew lots of people to whom coffee was poison and she pleaded with me to quit it and give Postum a trial. I did not take her advice right away, but tried a change of climate which did not do me any good. Then I dropped coffee and took up Postum.

"My improvement began immediately and I got better every day I used Postum.

"My bowels became regular and in two weeks all my pains were gone. Now I am well and strong and can eat anything I want to without distress. All of this is due to my having quit coffee, and to the use of Postum regularly.

"My son who was troubled with indigestion thought that if Postum helped me so, it might help him. It did, too, and he is now well and strong again.

"We like Postum as well as we ever liked the coffee and use it altogether in my family in place of coffee and all keep well." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The male of a pair of Mississippi wild cats belonging to Harry Britton, of Brazil, which he captured in the swamps of Mississippi, died a few days ago. An hour before the death of its mate the female began crying, and after its death the female screamed and tried to tear its way out of the cage.

Mrs. Charles Alexander, living two miles west of Petersburg, had been missing eggs for some time, and finally caught her pet cat eating them in the barn. She locked the cat in the cellar and forgot all about it until thirty-six hours afterward, when she discovered that it had eaten seven dozen of twelve dozen eggs she had put there. The cat was hanged.

W. D. Rinehart, a veteran engineer on the Midland, had an unpleasant experience last week. As he was bringing his train in from Ladoga a bird, blinded by the headlight, flew into the cab, striking him in the left eye. He was blinded by the shock, and the fireman had to bring in the train. A cut was inflicted below the eye, but no permanent injury is anticipated.

Luther Mehring, of Indianapolis, has left for Bruceville, Md., where he will pay to a number of old creditors $5200. The debts are of forty years' standing but Mehring does not desire to take advantage of statute of limitation. He left Bruceville after failing in business, with obligations amounting to about $2000. He has looked up all his creditors and will pay the debt with forty years' interest.

Frank Gibson, 12 years old, and his sister Blanche, aged 8, were shot and seriously wounded by Williard Gibson, a 14 year old brother, at their home in Lafayette. Frank found a shotgun in a corner of the room. William loaded the weapon and it was discharged. Frank's left hand and arm was torn away from the wrist, and Blanche received a charge of shot in her high side. The girl may die.

George Chamness, a farmer living east of Petersburg, was attracted by the ringing of a bell. Sometimes the sound was faint, other times loud and apparently near. He began wondering, when he looked up and saw a buzzard flying low. A bell was tied around it neck. Mr. Chamness believes this to be the famous "belled buzzard" seen in so many different parts of the United States.

John Blaize, a prominent farmer, near Petersburg, while playing with a shepherd dog, was bitten by the animal, which showed signs of rabies. The animal was killed and its head sent to Indianapolis for analysis. It is not known whether other dogs in the neighborhood have been bitten, but every precaution will be taken. Sheep valued at $85 were killed by dogs on Will Lamb's farm, just west of Petersburg, recently.

In a fit of despondency, brought on in part by physical ailments, due to the birth of her child two years ago, and by an unhappy marriage, from which she is now trying to free herself through Grand Rapids (Mich.) courts, Mrs. R. E. Durham attempted suicide at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stevens in South Bend, by drinking chloroform. That she is now alive and recovering is due to help summoned by her two-year-old baby.

A dog was the cause of a divorce suit that has just been filed in the Wayne county circuit court. A week before last Christmas Mrs. Rosa Traue told her husband that she would not live with him longer unless he got rid of a hound pup which he brought home with him one day. She has just entered suit for divorce, alleging that her husband left home with the pup several months ago, saying that he was going to find a home for the dog, and that he had not yet returned.

The city authorities hold that South Bend is in danger of an epidemic of rabies, unless drastic measures are taken to prevent the spread of the disease. Chief of Police James McWeeny has issued a warning that all dogs not wearing muzzles will be shot on sight. This is the second such warning that has been given out within the last two months. This time, however, the danger is not with dogs, as the disease is said to have spread to horses. So far two animals have been shot.

While digging a ditch through a part of what was once known as the "Bear swamp," Benjamin Miller, Alfred Purdy and Homer Purdy unearthed the greater part of a skeleton of a mastodon. Then men were digging about thirty inches below the surface when they found the first large bone. Among the parts of the skeleton found were the lower jaw, one of the two bones from the foreleg between the knee and ankle, the bones of one foot, several ribs, several fragments of ribs, twenty-five vertebrae, two teeth and other pieces which could not be distinguished.

David Miles, aged 81, a civil war veteran, was killed at Fort Wayne, when a runaway horse dashed into him, knocking him down. The horse was being driven by Miss Alice Wilson, a prominent society girl.

Representative Joe Moss, of Linton, permitted an incision into his hip, and as a result a half pint of blood and matter were removed. Mr. Moss has been confined to his bed since he was run down by an automobile in Indianapolis.

Isaac Hendricks, forty-seven years old, is slowly hiccoughing himself to death at Shelbyville. He was stricken with the affliction last week and since that time has been slowly sinking. Two physicians have failed to give him relief.

One of the few buffalo herds in the country is located near Fort Wayne on the Brookside farm, owned by John H. Bass. The owner is now rejoicing in the birth of a big, healthy calf, which is receiving as much attention as the high-bred horses and cattle on the place.

John Warble, who lives west of Columbus, lost a horse valued at $200 last week, as a result of a snake bite. The horse had been turned into a pasture, where it was feeding, when it was seen to wheel suddenly, give a squeal of pain and run. A little later the animal became violently ill and died. Investigation showed the horse had been bitten by a rattlesnake.

Melchor Maurer, a Wells county farmer engaged in blowing out stumps went back to relight a fuse which had failed to explode promptly. Just at that moment the explosion occurred and the man was frightfully injured about the head and face. It is feared he will be permanently blinded by the accident. It occurred in the morning and it was nearly evening before the injured man was found.

Lake county has doubled its population since 1900, according to the figures compiled by the Lake County Directory company. The present population of the county is 76,454, while in 1900 it was 37,892, making a gain in the last nine years of 38,562. The majority of the cities of the county have doubled their population, and two of the centers of population—Gary and Indiana Harbor—hardly existed at that time.

Ten poker players were arrested in a raid which the police made in Columbus on the cigar store of Dan Truax. A dispute was in progress at the game and one of the players said: "I wish the police would raid the joint." He had no sooner finished his remark than he looked up and the police were in the room. Another player declared that he would play his hand out, as he held some good looking cards. He was allowed to play the hand out and won the pot.

An exciting elopement took place at Otwell, when Edgar Traylor, son of Joe Trylor, a well-to-do-farmer, and Miss Fronnie Craig, daughter of Lawrence Craig, disappeared. Liverymen of Petersburg received a call to send to Otwell a carriage and a driver. The driver met the couple by appointment and brought them to Petersburg, where they took the train north presumably for some point in Illinois. Their friends had no inkling of the elopment until their parents missed them at the breakfast table.

Miss Grace Jenckes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray G. Jenckes, of Terre Haute, died suddenly of the rare malady, puerperal hemorrhage fulminanix, which means a lightning-like bursting of blood vessels. As yet medical science has not discovered the cause. There is no premonition of an attack and when it comes in the form, as in this instance, it is invariably fatal. Miss Jenckes was a popular member of the best social circles in the city, was prominent as a hostess and was active in St. Stephen's Episcopal church.

Sylvester S. Abrams, seventy-four years old, was struck and instantly killed by a west bound Pennsylvania freight train on a crossing east of Knightstown. Mr. Abrams, who lived south of the railroad, had been working in his garden north of the track, and was returning home when the train hit him, throwing him a distance of 300 feet. His skull was fractured, both legs and one arm broken and his body badly bruised. Mr. Abrams served in the civil was as a member of Company E, Eighteenth Missouri Infantry. A widow, six sons and two daughters survive.

Tony Hetzner and family, who have just moved into a house at 176 West Eighth street, Peru, were somewhat excited when one of the children unearthed in the cellar a coffin. The top of the coffin was close to the sun face and the child while digging struck the board top. Others of the family were soon in the cellar, some digging with the hope of unearthing a treasure box. The coffin was of an ancient type and contained bones and dust. Old-time residents say the neighborhood in which the Hetzner home is situated was the first cemetery ever in that loacility. Many years ago when Eigth street was cut through the cemetery scores of bodies were removed to what is now Mount Hope cemetery.

State Fish and Game Commissioner Z. T. Sweeney has issued a statement in which he says he will pay for the plowing and for the seed if farmers in this state will each set apart about one-quarter of an acre of ground and grow some osrt of covering where quail may be protected from hawks and other birds of prey and from the elements. Commissioner Sweeney says the quail are rapidly disappearing in Indiana because the underbrush is being cleared out and wire fences are taking the places of rail fences, leaving no corners where they may hide. He says something must be done by the farmers or the quail supply in this state will soon be a thing of the past. Not one quail in five is killed by a hunter, he declares, the others dying from starvation or exposure.

In an interview Mayor W. J. Hosey of Fort Wayne censured the police department for alleged neglect in allowing hotbeds of gambling to thrive and remissness in not closing up saloons at the proper hour at night.

There now remain thirteen saloon in Daviess county out of the thirty-nine which were in existence on February 23, when the county voted dry by an overwhelming majority. Of the thirteen remaining bars seven will will close the first week in June.

Charles Dinkins, a farmer who lives near Columbus, has a remarkable hen. Recently she laid two eggs in three minutes. That so overjoyed Dinkins that he was thinking of giving her something extra to eat, when the hen turned and picked holes in both eggs.

Xavier Daul, the oldest Mason in Indiana, died at the home of his daughter in Noblesville, aged 89. He was born in France in 1820 and came to this country in 1835. He joined the Masons at Murray, N. Y., in 1843 and was a member in good standing 66 years.

Inoculation of Clover.

Clovers do not always grow as readily or as vigorously as might be expected from the richness of the soil. In recent years it has been discovered by scientists that the growth of plants of this class (clovers, peas and beans) is dependent to some extent on the presence of small nodules or bunches on the roots. These nodules contain bacteria which in some mysterious way assist the roots in taking up food from the soil. If these bacteria are not present in the soil the clovers will be likely to make poor growth—indeed, alfalfa may not make any growth. If the proper kind of bacteria are supplied and the inoculation of soil and root is successful the plants will show extra vitality.

Cultures containing these bacteria have been sent out to farmers from the Ontario Agricultural College for the past four years, with directions for applying to the fields that are being seeded with clover. Last season 309 farmers reported that their alfalfa crops had been benefited by the application while 140 reported that there was no gain. With alsike clover the reports were equally favorable over 60 per cent of the experiments finding that the culture had improved the crop. With red clover the results were not so favorable, only 55 per cent having noted a gain. Peas and beans showed still less benefit from the application. As the work is still in its infancy it is probable that better results will be obtained as the methods of application are better understood. The illustration shows the comparative growths of inoculated and uninoculated alfalfa plants. In a bulletin just issued it is stated that the cultures will again be distributed for 1909 at a price of 25 cents for each bottle containing enough for 60 pounds of seed.—Montreal Star.

Soil Temperature and Seed Germination.

Scientists have discovered that the lowest soil temperature at which the process of growth begins in most cultivated crops is 45 to 48 degrees Fahrenheit, but the maximum results are attained only after the soil has reached a temperature of 68 to 70 degrees. The germination of wheat, rye, oats and flax go forward most rapidly at 77 to 87.8, and corn and pumpkins germinate best at 92 to 101. Corn will grow at a temperature of 51, requiring eleven days to come through, while it will germinate in three days at 65.3 degrees. Oats require seven days to germinate at 41, whereas they will germinate in two days at 65 degrees.

These facts emphasize the importance of so cultivating the soil as to develop heat at the earliest possible period. Our seep soils where irrigation has played hob can not warm up because they must first evaporate the water. Sandy soils warm more quickly than adobe for reasons which everybody understands. The depth of planting also has a great deal to do with the germination, and we are hoping that this spring will not linger long in the lap of winter as was the case with the last two or three seasons.—Denver Field and Farm.

Swiss Farm Profits.

There has been recently made an interesting report of investigations carried on co-operatively between the Department of Agriculture and farmers in Switzerland as to the gross and net returns derived from farms operated under different systems of management in 1906, the returns being compared with those secured during the preceding five years. The average profits as ascertained from 230 holdings were: On farms up to 12½ acres in size, $21 per acre; from 12½ to 25 acres, $21.50; from 25 to 37½ acres, $17; from 37½ to 75 acres, $18, and from farms of more than 75 acres, $10.25 per acre. Nearly 80 per cent of the products raised on Swiss farms consisted of animal, dairy and poultry products, an enormous quantity of such products being annually exported. This shows the result of cultivating a small amount of land well.

General Age of Trees.

Inquiry as to the general age of trees being put to an authority at Washington, it was found that the pine trees attained 700 years as a maximum length of life; 425 years was the allotted span of the silver fir; the larch lived 275 years, the red beech 245, the aspen 210, the birch 200, the ash 170, the elder 145, the elm 130. The heart of the oak begins to rot at about the age of 300 years. Of the holly, it is said that there is a specimen 410 years old near Aschaffenburg, Germany.

Balancing Ration.

When one has corn, corn fodder, ensilage and clover hay, it is considered the best practice for one to procure a food rich in protein, such as bran, cotton-seed meal or linseed meal, with which to balance the ration. If one mixes bran, corn and cotton-seed meal in the proportion of 5 parts bran, 3 parts cornmeal, 2 parts cotton-seed meal, and feeds 10 pounds of the mixture each day, with 30 pounds of ensilage and 10 pounds of clover hay, he will get very good results. Molasses is ordinarily fed by sprinkling over the hay or ensilage.—Country Gentleman.

Early Plowing.

The value of early plowing as a means of destroying weeds, especially rag weed, wild oats, artichokes, etc., is not appreciated fully by farmers. Similar weeds grow in a most discouraging manner, especially on low, moist land, during the summer, and in many instances take possession of the fields. They will appear on the scene next year, in multiplied numbers, if an effort is not made to destroy them this summer, which can best be done by early plowing.

The plow should be started in these weedy patches just as soon as the fields are cleared. Rag weeds are rank growing soil robbers which should not be permitted to ripen seed on any farm, but are now seen in corn fields, pastures and small grains in many sections. They are a special pest on some farms where careless methods of handling the soil have been employed. If such fields are plowed as early as possible the plants will be prevented from going to seed. Kingheads are now in possession of some very productive fields, and we believe this is due to spring plowing or no plowing, as such fields are often disked instead of plowed.

New Method of Keeping Potatoes.

A German publication, the Practical Adviser in Fruit Raising and Gardening, states that a new method for keeping potatoes and preventing sprouting consists in placing them on a layer of coke. Dr. Schiller, of Brunswick, who has published the method, is of the opinion that the improved ventilation by means of coke is not alone responsible for the result, but believes that it is due to the oxidation of the coke, which, however, is a very slow one. Coke always contains sulphur, and it is very possible that the minute quantities of oxides of carbon and sulphur, which result from the oxidation, mixing with the air and penetrating among the potatoes are sufficient to greatly retard sprouting. Potatoes so treated are said to keep in good condition until the following July.

Guinea Fowls.

The flesh of guineas is generally dark colored, tender, juicy and in flavor equal to the ring-neck English pheasant. Many think it more palatable, for the flavor is not so pronounced, and there is considerably more of it. The flesh of the white guinea is light in color, and if they are crossed with the pearl variety the meat of the latter will become nearly as light.

Don't Pasture Too Early

There is always a temptation to turn the stock on pasture before the grass has had a chance to get a start. At this time the animals will get little good from the pasture, and they are likely to do much damage in trampling the wet soil. Let the ground get solid and the grass a good start before they go on it.

Feeding Lambs.

Farmers' Bulletin No. 49 of the United States Department of Agriculture says that a mixture of two parts of cornmeal and one part cottonseed meal for ten weeks to lambs, with pasturage, gave a weekly gain of 2.95 pounds per head. The lambs were fed about 8½ pounds each per week of the mixture.

Spray For Apple Trees.

One of the most successful apple growers of Ohio uses arsenate of lead in the Bordeaux mixture to kill the different fungi, as well as to keep in check the coddling moth, spraying at least four times after the bloom falls. His formula for the Bordeaux is 3 pounds of sulphate of copper, 5 pounds of lime, 50 gallons of water.

Hastening Seed Germination.

The germination of seeds with hard coverings, such as cannas, eucalyptus, and even morning glories, can be hastened by soaking them in warm water for two to twelve hours. Sow the seeds at once upon removing them from the water. If given this treatment, morning glories will bloom in six weeks from sowing.

Millet as Horse Feed.

North Dakota farmers claim that millet is not a good food for horses, as it affects the kidneys, causes swellings of the joints and lameness. This might be true if the millet is used exclusively. In conjunction with other feeds, millet is all right, provided it is cut at the proper time.

Advance in Eggs.

The farm price for eggs has rapidly advanced in the last few years. In 1899 the average farm price for eggs for the United States was 11.15 cents a dozen; in 1903, 12.37 cents a dozen; in 1904, 17.2 cents; in 1905, 17.7 cents, and the price for 1908 will be in advance of that.

Pure Bred Stock.

It requires a smart man to handle pure bred stock with profit. The first cost is greater, and to get back the money he must be business man enough to sell the young stock at fair prices. But good stock is the cheapest stock for the right man.

Queen Bees.

It is said that bees usually supersede their queens before they are too old for service; and when an apiary is once stocked with a good grade of queens the bees can, as a rule, be depended upon to supersede their queens at the proper time.

"Father," said the young college student, unfolding a sheet of paper, "here is a careful estimate of what I shall have to tax you for my expenses next term."

"All right, John."

The elder man took the sheet of paper and looked over it.

Then he began making marks on it with a pencil.

"What are you doing, father?" asked the young man, uneasily.

"I'm revising it downward, my son," answered the other, continuing to make marks with his pencil.

When People Lose Their Taste.

"When people lose their taste," said a physician, "they retain their old likes and dislikes just the same. Miss Smith, for instance, can't tell a slice of roast beef from a fried onion, but she disliked onions before her taste went, and therefore she won't eat them now."

"People lose their taste through severe illnesses, and with the loss of taste the loss of smell nearly always goes. Hence queer, cruel practical jokes. I know a woman without smell to whom a pint of onion juice was sent in a cologne bottle. She deluged herself with this onion juice and appeared in a crowded, heated ballroom.

"To a man without taste or smell all cheeses must be alike, yet old Brownlow won't touch limburger. He says it would make him ill, and probably it would. It is very odd to hear these deficient people praising and condemning food and drink. They do it, though. They do it as heartily as you or I.

"I have seen old Brownlow send away in disgust a glass of white wine, claiming it was corked, while at the same time he ate calmly an addled egg."—Baltimore Herald.

Clerks in book stores are expected to know the inside of every book, and to be able to advise prospective customers much as a doctor prescribes for a patient. A writer in Tit-Bits relates the following rather one-sided conversation which took place in a book store. The lady entered in a hurry.

"I've only got a little time," she said to the clerk, "and I want to get my husband a book for his birthday. Show me what you have.

"I don't want anything too expensive, and I don't want anything cheap, either. He's a mild-mannered man, and not fond of sports, so don't show me anything in that line. And don't show me anything in the way of trashy novels; and I might as well say right off that you can't persuade me to buy history or biography.

"I'm in a dreadful hurry, and I've wasted too much time here already. Of course you don't know my husband, but from all I've said can't you suggest something appropriate?"

"Yes, ma'am," said the clerk, humbly, looking along the shelves. "Here's a book called 'How to Manage a Talking Machine.'"

Why the Silk Tiler

It seems that the silk hat of advanced civilization has invaded Japan, though not with everybody there is it in high favor. A Japanese newspaper says that it is now an inevitable and laughter-provoking feature of public functions, but it can't understand how it happens that people who are famous for their artistic taste should have come to adopt it. The silk hat resembles whiskers in one respect. Almost everybody knows or can find out when whiskers originated, but nobody knows why they were tolerated. That is the case with the hat in question. It has been traced back to its beginnings, but why it was invented and worn has remained a mystery. As nearly as can be ascertained it was designed to be ludicrous, and yet that is about the only purpose it serves.

Stung for 15 Years

by Indigestion's pangs—trying many doctors and $200.00 worth of medicine in vain, B. F. Aycens, of Ingleside, N. C., at last used Dr. King's New Life Pills, and writes they wholly cured him. At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Foster occurred the death of Mrs. Adams, a sister of Mrs. Foster, one day last week. The funeral took place Friday of last week at the U. B. church in Newville.

Fred Huffman, who suffered years ago from the effects of a stroke of paralysis, is still in poor health. He recently remarked that his stay in this world may not be much longer, although he is able to go town and to get about considerably.

Solomon Hose, who has been ill for several weeks, died Sunday morning His funeral took place Thursday in the M. E. church in Butler.

Frank Best and family, of near Edon, came last Saturday for a visit with their many friends and relatives in this vicinity.

Miss Laura DeVinney has returned home from her school work in LaGrange county to spend her summer vacation at the home of her parents.

Francis Steckley and family went to Corunna last Saturday to visit over Sunday and perhaps longer with friends and relatives in that part of the county.

Many people were prevented from attending decoration ceremonies last Sunday by the condition of the weather. Those that did go to the Butler cemetery in the afternoon had a pleasant meeting with those who were there as the weather a little later in the day became very fine.

O M. Nimmons, wife and son, Ralph, took dinner last Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Nimmons and in the afternoon made a brief visit to the Butler cemetery.

James Shull and family, of Michigan, we hear, were here lately visiting with their many friends. They also took in decoration exercises at the Butler cemetery.

Joseph Shade and family, who resided many years in this county and who have many friends and relatives here, is now living in New Zealand. Mr. Shade is noted for having lived in different places in this and other countries.

Late as it is in the spring season Joseph Wilson and several others are bailing hay this week.

Mrs. Peter Grube is again in Hicksville for further treatment of her complicated disorders, but her general health is reported better.

The recent warm, showery weather has boomed the farm crops finely. Insects, flies and mosquitos are also increasing in great numbers. In some localities the latter are said to be very numerous, cross and large too. "Many of them will weigh a pound."

We congratulate the Pushtown correspondent who sent in items last week and trust in the future more will be forwarded to the paper, but, as we have been told, some soreness was caused by the statement that "when this one," meaning the buggy horse, "wears out the township will get them an automobile," we suggest that great care be used to avoid hurting the feelings of anyone. This suggestion has been written by request and the writer hopes it will be properly received by all concerned.

Peter Bechtel's hired hand recently quit work and left very suddenly. He only gave him half a day's notice before leaving, it is said. We hear the man went to work for the railroad.

Mrs. Webster is having an up-ground milk house and cellar built of cement blocks on the farm occupied by Mr. Dennis and family. This will be a nice improvement to the place.

Governor Marshall keeps right on making good. He is justifying his friends and disarming his enemies. He made a clean campaign when all sorts of abuse and gross misrepresentation was hurled at him. Inaugurated, he set about being governor of the whole people. He refused to play peanut politics with the legislature, and refused to permit the legislature and his own party politicians to play peanut politics with him. Since the legislature has adjourned he has been working on his job, in striking contrast to the governor who preceded him. The latest evidence of his intention to place the office of Indiana's chief executive above ward politics is his selection of the state public accounting board. In these times, the man who, although a thorough partisan, nevertheless stands out against the pressure of his party and names the appointees upon the sole qualification of their merits as men fit for the work to be done rather than their party services, is a big man. And Governor Marshall is measuring right up.—Shelbyville News.

Patten didn't work the "squeeze play" on the spectators in May wheat; at least he didn't do it to as great an extent as it is believed he could have carried the game. He is credited with having cleaned up three to five million dollars in the deal and that, no doubt, is enough to satisfy the acquisitive nature of a man who passes the plate in church every Sunday morning. It was expected that the closing days of May on the Chicago board of trade would prove the most exciting in years, but Patten didn't turn a hand to bring about such a condition, but was contented to let things drift as they might under light trading. Patten is still convinced that the wheat supply in the country is short and that high prices will continue.

No Rest Day or Night

"I would lay awake for hours without any apparent cause, or dream terrible dreams which would bring on extreme spells of nervousness. After taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and Tonic for awhile I could sleep well, and the nervous spells have left me." MISS ALMA HUG, R. R, No. 4, Canal Dover, Ohio.

Without sleep the nervous system soon becomes a wreck, and the healthful activity of all the organs obstructed. Restful, body-building sleep accompanies the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine because it soothes the irritable nerves, and restores nervous energy. When taken a few days according to directions, the most restless sufferer will find sleep natural and healthful. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

DON'T WAIT IF YOU ONLY KNEW HOW SCOTT'S EMULSION would build you up, increase your weight, strengthen your weak throat and lungs and put you in condition for next winter, you would begin taking it now. Take it in a little cold milk or water 50c. and $1.00. All Druggists

A Carpet Filled with Gold.

The carpet on the floor of the adjusting room at the San Francisco mint is about worn out and a requisition has been sent to the Treasury Department for a new one. After the old covering has been taken up it will be handled with far more care than the new one. It will be twenty times more valuable, because it is literally lined with gold.

The old carpet will be burned, and from the ashes the Treasury Department officials expect to extract anywhere from $2,500 to $5,000. In the adjusting room at San Francisco files are used to trim off $10 pieces. The gold is first run off into blanks and later stamped, so it frequently happens that a piece is overweight. Parts of the filing thus taken on filter on to the floor and become imbedded in the grain of the carpet. The very best carpets are purchased for this room, so that the closely woven material will scarcely hold the scattered bits of gold. It is nothing unusual for the authorities to get $5,000 worth of gold out of the ashes resulting from the burning of one of these carpets.

Other thrifty devices are resorted to in order to capture escaped particles of gold at the mints. The floor sweepings are treasured with the utmost care; they furnish enough money to pay the salary of the janitor several times over. Gold even goes up the chimney in smoke from the smelters. The chimneys are regularly scraped, and the resultant soot and dirt scanned for gold. Employes who handle bars of the yellow metal are not permitted to dispose of the aprons, overalls and gloves with which they are provided. These articles are all burned after they have outlived their usefulness, and yield a rich harvest.

Col. Strathmore 2:12¼

Col. Strathmore 2:12¼, owned and in the stud of L. J. Diehl, Butler, Ind., the sire of Clatemore, with a four-year-old record of 2:21¼, winner of five straight races his first year out, and Marion Strathmore, with a two-year-old record of 2:27 in a three-year-old class, is a representative of the greatest family of early producers in the world. He is an exceptionally fast horse himself and also a sire of early speed. His sire, Strathmore, is the sire of Abble Strathmore 2:07¼, Terrell S. 2:08¼, Strathmeath 2:10¼, Strathdennis 2:10¾, and eighty-five other standard performers. He is one of the greatest of the trotting horse family builders. His dam, Crescent, is herself a race mare with a record of 2:24¼, and is the dam of Col. Strathmore 2:12¼, Crescendo 5:15¼, and George Crescens 2:17¼ as a three-year-old, she by Ira Wilkes, sire of eighteen standard performers; his second dam, Rigolette, took a race record of 2:22 and is also the dam of Exmore 2:18¼, Crescent 2:24¼. Many of his colts now in training show extreme speed, one in particular, a yearling, owned at Logansport, Ind., that has stepped an eighth in 17¼ seconds hitched to a cart. They are uniformally good individuals, good headed and have plenty of speed. Col. Strathmore is a coming young sire, worthy the consideration of breeders. Terms $20.00 to insure. $25.00 for living foal.

appreciate the efforts of the tailor to give them good style and well wearing clothes at a cost that is not prohibitive. It is only the FIRST cost that make custom made clothes seem expensive.

THE LENGTH OF TIME

that they wear and keep their appearance is far longer than the ordinary store clothing, and proper care in pressing and hanging makes them last much longer. Try our tailor shop for your next suit or overcoat.

Easy Confinement

If you have cause to fear the pains of childbirth, remember that they are due to weakness, or disease, of the womanly organs, and that healthy women do not suffer, like weak ones.

The specific, medicinal, vegetable ingredients, of which that famous, female medicine and womanly tonic is composed, will build up the womanly organs to a healthy state and thus prevent needless suffering.

"Before my confinement," writes Mrs. Rose Schubarth, of Monument, Colo., "I had such bearing-down pains I didn't know what to do. Cardui quickly relieved me. Some months later I had a fine 12-lb. baby, was sick only thirty minutes, and did not even have a doctor."

MARSHAL LOWE

Attempts to Arrest Two Young Men

And a Fight Ensues That Lasted Nearly Thirty Minutes and Attracted Many People

Friday forenoon George Greenwood and Emery Dunn went to Grabill and took on board a generous supply of extract of hops, returning at 5:05 p m over the Wabash.

The young men landed all right and hired one of our city draymen to haul a case of beer down town. They were riding in the dray and had proceeded down Broadway as far as the Cottage hotel when they were halted by Marshal Lowe who ordered them to alight and go to the calaboose as his prisoners. And here is where the trouble began.

It seems that someone who noticed the young men at the Wabash depot telephoned to the marshal, informing him that there were two drunks there and requested him to come up and take care of them. Marshal Lowe was at his home when he received the message and at once started for the depot, meeting the dray as above mentioned.

He got them from the vehicle, but they balked and fought like tigers for nearly half an hour before they could be subdued and taken to the lockup. During the scrap there were a number of knockdowns, several citizens who were called upon to help the official, responding with a vigor seldom seen outside the prize ring.

John Baxter received a powerful blow in the face from the fist of George Greenwood, Dr. J. W. Tyson was also struck in the face by Greenwood, but he soon put a quietus on the young man with several stunning and well directed blows. Dr. Tyson knocked one of Greenwood's front teeth out, but in so doing his hand was badly lacerated and is still very sore.

Dunn seemed to be able to stand all kinds of punishment, and was battered and choked hard enough to kill most men. Greenwood finally gave in and walked along without resistance, but Dunn fought all the way to the jail and was finally landed safely behind the bars.

Saturday morning Dunn and Greenwood were given a hearing before Mayor Webster who fined them each $5 and costs. There are also two other indictments against Greenwood and three against Dunn, but these will not be pressed unless it is necessary to preserve good behavior on the part of the men.

We believe Mayor Webster acted with a good deal of common sense in the matter and his course is more to be approved than condemned.

THE GRAVEL PIT MANAGEMENT AGAIN

"Taxpayer," who is the author of an article recently published in the HERALD, wishes a little space in the paper to reply to an article published in a recent issue of the Record that was evidently meant as a reply to my article on the above subject.

The author of the article in the Record finds some fault because I did not write over my real name and thus fails to sign his name to the article which he had published. In the future perhaps he will be more consistent. Then he intimates that the author of the article in the HERALD is a person who, if he had his way, would be likely to make roads as they were made long years ago when they were only trails through the woods. After reading the article in the Record we thought there was nothing in it worthy of notice, but as we wished to present to the public another reason for a change in the management of the gravel pit, thought it best to call attention to some things stated in it.

Until a short time ago supervisors only were paid $1 50 per day and could only put in forty days each year. Now their wages are $2 00 per day and they are allowed to put in sixty days each year. Thus it will be seen that their wages have been increased and their time of service each year lengthened. This makes a double increase of expense to the public. The trustees who have charge of the gravel pit should think of this and not try to carry out a plan that is likely to still further increase expense to the public. If the plan lately adopted is carried out and the supervisors who get gravel at the pit near the Butler cemetery are paid as provided in the plan, it will be a precedent for all the supervisors in the county, and perhaps in the state too, to demand and get the same pay for like services.

It is up to the people to call a halt in this matter, and if the officers persist in carrying out the plan referred to in this and in my former article they will be enjoined and stopped by a process in court. A similar matter was stopped in the same way in this county a few years ago and if there is no other way to stop it in the present gravel pit management it must be stopped in the same way as a last resort.

SAM G. STONE NEW MEMBER OF SCHOOL BOARD

In the selection of Mr. Sam G. Stone to succeed John Potter as a member of the school board, the HERALD feels like taking off its hat to the city council. The selection of Mr.

Stone means a new era in municipal politics. It means that the city council is fair and impartial and means to do the best in its power for the patrons of the Butler schools. The council is republican with the exception of T. A. Hoffman, and we are pleased to note a radical departure from former elections of this kind.

Mr. Stone has been largely instrumental in the erection of our splendid school building, and has for many years been a leading factor in growth and development of our city. Always an honorable, courteous gentleman, Mr. Stone stands for everything that means the upbuilding of our schools and our city.

It is well.

CONCORD DIVIDED INTO TWO PARTS

The county commissioners of DeKalb county in session Monday forenoon sprung a little surprise when they granted a petition and created a new township in the county by dividing Concord into two parts. The north half retains the name of the parent, Concord, and the south half was given the name Spencer township.

This action was taken by the commissioners on a petition presented to them, bearing the names of over two hundred taxpayers residing in the south half, practically all having signed excepting ten or twelve. This petition grew out of a feeling existing between Spencerville and St. Joe for several years. Years ago St. Joe needed a new school house and the township trustee of Concord township built it. Soon Spencerville felt they were entitled to as good a school house at St. Joe, and when the trustee proceeded to build it, the town of St. Joe was incorporated and was therefore not assessed for the building at Spencerville. The citizens residing near Spencerville felt they had a grievance in that they were obliged to build their own building whereas all had helped to build at St. Joe.

Recently the building at St. Joe has become inadequate and they are now asking the trustee for a new $20,000 school building. That part of Concord township now known as Spencer township concluded to incorporate on a larger scale than St. Joe did, and made themselves a new township.

The new trustee of Spencer township was appointed Monday by the commissioners in the person of Wm. G. Erick, of Spencerville.—Auburn Courier.

Plain Talks On Peerless Woven Wire Fence

WITHOUT A RIVAL

When you find "the sheep in the meadow and the cows in the corn" because of a broken fence, it is not much comfort to remember that you bought the fence "cheap."

"Cheap" fence is a delusion and a snare. No man who thinks well of himself, his farm, and his stock will take chances with it.

We could sell cheap fence and make more money, but we prefer to sell Peerless Fence—so we can look our customers in the face afterwards and keep their friendship.

Your sheep, cattle, hogs, horses and poultry are safe, when you put them behind Peerless Fence.

The best way to see the difference between "Peerless" fence and the cheap kind is after a season's use.

The "cheap" fence will be sagging, rusted and broken, while you will find the Peerless ready for several more seasons of hard usage.

We can show you the size and style best adapted for your purposes. Why not drop in and talk the matter over with us?

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Tot Died to Save Baby Brother.

Lela Williamson, of Indianapolis, Ind., 8 years old, lost her life in an effort to rescue her baby sister, Irene, when fire broke out in her home. The girl failed in the attempt, but firemen rescued the baby as well as another sister. The Williamson family lives on the second floor of a barn. The mother was preparing supper when the flames broke out. She seized Lela and rushed down the stairs. Forcing her way through the smoke between groping firemen, the child went back for her baby sister. But the baby was not to be found in the room where it had been playing. The girl started to search the remaining four rooms. A policeman found her prostrate. She died in his arms as she was carried from the building.

Brave Battle to Save Wife.

Louis Cohen, of Buffalo, N. Y., saw his wife leap into the swirling river between Second and Third Sister Islands, only 150 feet above the brink of the cataract at Niagara Falls. Without a moment's hesitation he followed her, caught her hand and struggled desperately to save her. Mrs. Cohen probably died in her husband's arms while he was struggling with the current. The dead body was torn from him and washed down stream. People on the shore rescued him and his wife's body was recovered later just above the cataract, where it had caught on a rock. Mrs. Cohen had been despondent owing to ill health.

Was Held Up By Gypsies.

Mr. Henry Meyer, of Fort Wayne, Ind., reported to Deputy Sheriff Ed Courtney that he had been held up and robbed while driving with his wife south of the city. He claimed that the robbery occurred in a particularly dark spot, and he would not be able to identify the members of the gypsy band camped near the spot he described. Mr. Meyer stated that his buggy was surrounded by the band, a number of whom had revolvers. The gypsies moved into Adams County.

Overturned at Sharp Curve.

Frank Zimmerman, of Indianapolis, Ind., was instantly killed in an accident on the Riverside line when a well filled street car overturned on a sharp curve at Twenty-seventh street. Arthur Waters is lying at the point of death in the City Hospital. Miss Ethel Haynes, who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, is another victim in a serious condition.

Farmer Trampled By Horse.

George Essener, of near Tocsin, Ind., met with a serious accident while unhitching his horse from a wagon at the home. One of the animals frightened and knocked Essener to the ground. The wagon was also dragged over his body. The family hurried to his assistance and found several wounds about his head and body. He will be under the care of a physician for several weeks.

Farmer Killed by Lightning.

Reuben Whitley, a farmer, living six miles west of Terre Haute, Ind., was struck by lightning and killed. He left home in the morning to hoe corn in a distant field, and when he did not return at night a search was made. His body was found under a clump of trees, and a long burn on his neck showed the course of the lightning.

Town Loses Its Port.

By cutting its way through a narrow neck of land, making a new channel a short distance away, the Arkansas river has made a cut off at Douglas, Ark., leaving that town three miles inland. The new channel is already 340 feet wide.

TAFT OPENS BIG FAIR WITH ALASKA GOLD KEY

President Sends Sparks Across Continent Starting Pacific Exposition.

JAMES J. HILL WARNS NATION

Magnate Sees Danger and Pleads for Law Enforcement Instead of Law Making.

President Taft, in the White House, at 3:15 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, pressed a telegraphy key of Alaska gold and sent a spark across the continent that put in motion the wheels of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition in Seattle, loosed the waters of its fountains, unfurled its banners, started its bands playing, released showers of daylight fireworks, called upon the saluting guns of the American and Japanese fleets, set all the steamers in the harbor and all the locomotives in the railroad yards whistling and brought forth universal rejoicing from all Seattle.

Big Fair Is Complete.

The exercises at the world's fair grounds preceding the President's signal were carried out with military precision. The exposition gates were opened at 8:30 o'clock. At 9:30 troops from the United States army and navy, from the Japanese cruisers Aso and Soya and the State militia paraded through the grounds, under the command of Colonel T. C. Woodbury, U. S. A., and the column was reviewed from a stand at the head of the court of honor by exposition officials, visiting governors and Admirals H. Ijiohi and Uriel Sebree.

The ceremonial exercises were held in a vast natural amphitheater sloping to Lake Washington. The program consisted of music, invocation by Catholic Bishop Onward J. O'Day, brief address by Director General I. A. Nadeau and President J. F. Chilberg, the long address by James J. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern board, and a benediction by Episcopal Bishop Frederick W. Keator.

Mr. Hill said: "There are four great words that should be written upon the four corner stones of every public building in this land, with the sacredness of a religious rite. These watch words of the republic are equality, simplicity, economy and justice. They are interwoven with every fiber of the national fabric. To forget or deny them will lead to every misfortune and every possibility of destruction that rises now threateningly in the path of our country's greatness.

"Frequent use of the phrase, 'our complex civilization,' creates a vague impression that simplicity has been banished necessarily from the modern world by a kind of natural evolution. Whereas it remains now, as always, the normal rule of a wholesome national life.

"We have complicated our lawmaking until, despite the high standards, the unimpaired traditions and the continual labors of the courts, the administration of justice is difficult and sometimes uncertain. The greatest service to the nation, to every State and city to-day, would be the substitution for a term of years of law enforcement for law-making."

Taft Sends Message.

The ceremony of pressing the gold key in the east room of the White House in Washington by which President Taft to-day formally opened the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition was simple. There was a delay of fifteen minutes at Seattle in completing the arrangements, and it was 3:15 p. m. (Washington time) when President Taft touched the golden telegraph instrument. Practically the entire diplomatic corps was present. The message which followed quickly after the current that put everything in motion was as follows:

"The White House, Washington, June 1, 1909.—Mr. J. E. Chilberg, President Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Seattle, Wash.

"I congratulate you and your associates on this auspicious opening of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, and I congratulate the people of the great Northwest on the courage and enterprise they have shown in bringing it forth. The exposition, designed as it is to exploit the natural resources and marvelous wealth of Alaska and the development of trade and commerce on the Pacific slope, should appeal not only to the people of the West but to the people of the country at large. I trust it will fully meet the expectations of those to whose untiring energies it owes its birth and that it will prove a source of instruction and education to its thousands of visitors. WILLIAM H. TAFT."

President Taft and Senator Piles then made brief addresses.

KILLED IN QUARREL.

Wealthy New York Farmer Slain by His Neighbor.

Morris Donovan, a wealthy farmer of Clyde, N. Y., was killed by his neighbor, Beckwith Tremper. The killing occurred at the home of Tremper. He, Donovan and Fred Hart, an employe of Donovan's, spent the night in the Tremper barn drinking cider. A quarrel was started and the killing followed.

JEWELER SHOOTS A BURGLAR.

Unidentified Man, Found in House, Is Killed by Second Bullet.

Albert Esberger, a jeweler, shot and killed an unidentified burglar in his home at 241 Helen street, Cincinnati. Esberger was awakened by a noise in his kitchen. He secured a revolver and fired a shot at a man he saw in the kitchen. The man jumped out of a window and Esberger fired again. The intruder fell dead on the ground below the window.

DAYS OF JOY AND NIGHTS OF PAIN.

QUAKER CITY STRIKE RIOTS.

Mobs Beat Imported Crews in Philadelphia—Trouble Spreads.

Car-strike riots were renewed in Philadelphia Thursday, following an outbreak the previous night, in which nearly 100 persons were injured. This disturbance was in northeast Philadelphia, the scene of the riots, when a crowd attacked two trolley cars which were manned by imported workmen. The windows in the cars were broken, the car crews were seriously beaten, and many persons in the crowd were hurt by flying bricks. Several arrests were made. As the result of the disturbances in Kensington Lieut. Sykes, commander of the police in the district, was suspended from duty and will be tried before a police board on a charge of failing to lead his men against the rioters. Sykes, it is said, did not leave the station house during the rioting. All of those injured in the serious rioting will recover. About 100 are under treatment in hospitals. The station houses were filled to overflowing with persons arrested for rioting. The elevated and subway system of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, which has been a bulwark of strength for the company since the strike began, became tied up by a partial strike of its employes Thursday. The trouble started when a west-bound train reached the 46th street station. Here the crew deserted and the train was run to the 69th street terminal by men sent out from that point. Subsequently other crews deserted their trains at the 69th street terminal. The company's officials would not discuss the situation, but the ticket windows were closed and the crowds on the platforms took to the streets.

FRANCE'S BIRTH RATE GROWS.

Vital Statistics for 1908 Show More Are Born than Die.

The vital statistics of France, which in 1907 showed an excess of 19,892 deaths over the births for that year, a fact that led to the most pessimistic predictions for the future of the French race, have now been published for 1908. Their study brings to light more reassuring official figures and shows an excess of 46,441 births over deaths for that year. The total of deaths decreased 48,266 in 1908, while the births increased 18,067.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Before a tremendous crowd in Philadelphia Jack O'Brien stayed six rounds with Jack Johnson without suffering any damage, and would have secured a draw out of it had there been a decision rendered.

Boxing contests of not more than thirty minutes' duration received a strong endorsement in the Wisconsin Assembly when that house, by a vote of 40 to 34 ordered the bill to engrossment.

159,832 LEAVE U. S. FOR CANADA.

Exodus of Settlers Over Border in Past Year Breaks All Records.

The report of the immigration department for the fiscal year was issued from Winnipeg Man., Monday. The year closed March 31. The report contains statistics for the whole of Canada, and shows that immigration into Canada via ocean ports from Great Britain and European countries decreased 117,081 persons from the preceding fiscal year. This decline is attributed to restrictive legislation aimed at indigent or somewhat undesirable immigrants. It has not seriously affected the inrush from the British isles. The immigration of settlers from the United States, however, not only shows an increase over the last fiscal year, but it breaks all records for immigration from across the southern border. In the twelve months prior to March 31, 159,832 settlers from the United States came into Canada, bringing with them money and effects the estimated value of which was $60,000,000.

ASK ACREAGE IN DESERT LAND.

Big Rush at Phoenix—Railroad Representative Jarred by Ruling.

The rush at the Phoenix, Ariz., land office Thursday resulted in the filing of seventy-three applications on a total of over 20,000 acres of desert land at different points adjacent to Agua Fria River, twenty-five miles west of Phoenix. The line had been formed for twenty-four hours preceding the opening at 9 o'clock. Well toward the head of the line was a representative of the land department for the Santa Fe Railroad with a large quantity of railroad land scrip. The registrar and receiver promulgated a ruling that no one applicant could make more than two filings, or 320 acres, at one time. The railroad representative retired without filing. Later in the day, after the line cleared, the railroad representative made a filing on 2,700 acres with forest scrip.

FLOOD DAMAGE IS $500,000.

Fourteen Inches of Rain Falls in the Black Hills, Tying Up Railroads.

For the first time in several days Deadwood, S. D., has a telegraphic communication with the outside world. A conservative estimate of the flood loss in the Black Hills is $500,000. Both the Northwestern and the Burlington roads have sustained very heavy losses. Neither road has had a train into Deadwood for three days and will be obliged to bring in mails by team for several days. Fourteen inches of rain has fallen in the Black Hills, breaking all records. Many mines have been forced to suspend.

President Captured and Freed, Defeats the Rebel Forces.

The palace of President Leguia in Lima, Peru, was attacked by revolutionary forces and the loyalty of the troops was all that saved the chief executive from being deposed from office. The revolutionists, after hard fighting, succeeded in entering the palace and making the President prisoner, but the loyal soldiers, after recovering from the panic into which the unexpected attack threw them, advanced upon the rebels and rescued Leguia unharmed. The President, restored to power, immediately took charge of putting down the disorder. The fighting lasted for some time, but resulted in the complete routing of the revolutionary forces. Later Leguia rode through the streets, which were closely guarded by cavalry, and assured the townspeople and tradesmen the danger was passed.

BUSINESS MAN IS SUICIDE.

John W. Speas, Leader in Commercial Affairs, Shoots Himself.

John W. Speas, a prominent business and club man, committed suicide at his home in Kansas City by shooting. He had been in ill health and was despondent. Mr. Speas had been connected for years with the advancement of Kansas City. He was president of the Monarch Vinegar Company, treasurer of the Priests of Pallas Carnival Association, was the first president of the board of directors of Convention Hall and a member of the Kansas City Club and the Commercial Club.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

President Taft has appointed William W. Williams immigration commissioner. Mr. Williams once before held this office, with President Roosevelt.

Walter E. Clark, a Washington newspaper man, has been appointed governor of Alaska, and William S. Washburn, of New York, has been appointed civil service commissioner to succeed James T. Williams, resigned.

Nelson S. Pratt, who has just been inaugurated as mayor of Spokane, Wash., and the council of that city are to work under the amended charter providing that unsatisfactory officials may be recalled upon a petition of 25 per cent of the voters. The same charter also provides for an initiative and referendum on the appeal of 10 per cent of the voters who voted on May 4. Mayor Pratt, a Democrat, was elected on a nonpartisan platform, the Democratic machine having supported J. T. Omo.

Governor Stubbs of Kansas has received a letter from President Taft expressing strong resentment over the effort made by the governor to make political capital out of the appointment of his personal friend, Robert Stone of Topeka, to be an assistant to the attorney general and at the same time revoked the appointment of Stone. The President said he would not permit himself to be drawn into any factional fight. He had supposed that Stone had the backing of the congressional delegation, but found later that the first known of the appointment by Senator Curtis and his friends was the boastful announcement made in the Stubbs-Bristow papers.

The Wetmore bill, which had passed the Michigan Senate and provided a salary of $5,000 for the clerk of the Supreme Court, was defeated. It came up for consideration again in committee of the whole in the House and the farmers renewed their fight to have the figure placed at $3,500. They failed. The clerk will now receive the fees of the office, which amount to much more than $5,000.

A campaign is well under way to elect Gov. Johnson United States senator from Minnesota to succeed Moses E. Clapp, whose term expires in 1911.

Work of Congress

In the Senate Monday the proposition to increase the duty on lemons from 1 cent to 1½ cents a pound was agreed to by a vote of 43 to 28. The House duty on bacon, hams and lard was restored upon motion of Mr. Aldrich, who withdrew the committee amendments increasing it. An effort of Mr. Bacon to reconsider the paragraph relating to fresh beef, mutton, etc., in order to decrease the duties on those articles was defeated. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate spent the day Tuesday in a discussion of the cotton schedule of the tariff bill. The most noticeable feature of the debate was a speech by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, in which he declared that the Republican party had never promised "revision downward." Senator Aldrich gave notice that, beginning with Wednesday night, night sessions would be held. The House was in session only thirteen minutes, adjourning until Thursday without transacting any business.

-:—:-

The Senate Wednesday adopted a resolution for day and night sessions, and the Vice President ruled that the absence of a quorum could not be called to the attention of the chair if the Senator occupying the floor declined to yield for that purpose. Senator La Follette began a two days' speech, arguing for a lower tariff. Senators Nelson and Gore spoke along the same line and Senator Elkins pleaded for a higher tariff on coal and oil. Senator Frye defended the charge that the New England cotton mills are making unusually large profits. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

Senators Aldrich and Stone engaged in a sharp exchange of words Thursday morning in a discussion growing out of Senator Aldrich's charge that the German government was interfering in tariff legislation. Mr. Stone said the German government resented that charge, and Mr. Aldrich attempted to show that his statement was directed against the government. Senator La Follette continued his speech against high tariff rates in the pending bill. At 5:30 p. m. the Senate took a recess till 8 o'clock, when discussion of the bill was continued until 10:30. After trying for three-quarters of an hour to obtain a quorum and not meeting with success the House adjourned until Monday. The point of no quorum was made by Mr. Macon (Arkansas), who demanded the presence of a constitutional majority for the consideration of the bill amending the laws of Porto Rico. That the Republican plan to pass the bill the next week was made evident when Mr. Payne, the majority leader, served notice that if a quorum was not present on Monday next he would move that the sergeant-at-arms bring in the absentees.

Through forenoon, afternoon and evening sessions the Senate Friday labored on the cotton schedule. Mr. La Follette completed his long speech attacking the changes in the Dingley rates which were recommended by the Senate Finance Committee and replied to Senator Penrose's charge that he was shamming sickness as an excuse for his absence from the night session. He said he was not sick, but was very tired and was resting in order to be in shape to continue his speech in the Senate. At the night session Chairman Aldrich replied to Mr. La Follette's assault upon the work of the Finance Committee and made a general defense of amendments, which he asserted were necessary to carry out the intent of the framers of the Dingley law. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

After devoting the larger portion of Saturday to listening to a discussion of the cotton cloth schedule, the Senate entered upon a period of voting late in the afternoon and rapidly disposed of the entire subject of changing from ad valorem to specific duties for the purpose of preventing under-valuations. On all the votes taken the finance committee was sustained by a majority of ten or eleven. Three votes were necessary to accomplish this result, and others would have been necessary but for Senator Bacon, who, seeing the futility of opposing the committee, suggested the grouping of the votes after the first two ballots had been taken. This suggestion was unanimously agreed to, with the result that so much was accomplished that a night session was not held. Senator Dolliver occupied much of the time of the session with a speech in which he indulged in much caustic criticism of the methods of the finance committee. The House was not in session.

COL. A. K. M'CLURE DIES.

Famous Civil War Figure Founded and Edited Philadelphia Times.

Colonel Alexander K. McClure, friend and biographer of Abraham Lincoln, prothonotary of the Supreme and Superior courts of Pennsylvania and for many years a prominent figure in politics and journalism, died Sunday at his home in Wallingford, Delaware County, Pa., aged 81 years.

Mr. McClure was born in Sherman's Valley, Perry County, Pa., June 9, 1828. The early years of his life were spent on his father's farm. At the age of 14 years, after being fairly well grounded in the rudiments of a common school education, his school days ended, and he was apprenticed to James Marshall, a tanner.

Before he was 19 years of age Mr. McClure had quit the tannery business, acquired a smattering of the art of printing and started a newspaper of his own at Mifflin, Pa. Here he let his taste for politics, which had been well fostered in the tanyard discussions, have full play. The result was that before he attained his majority he was called into conference over the congressional situation as the friend of Andrew G. Curtin. Later Curtin was defeated. His young champion always attributed this defeat to General Cameron, a Democratic state leader, and hated him accordingly. Both the friendship and the hatred Mr. McClure formed at this early period lasted many years.

It was in 1850 that McClure first entered the "big editorial field," as it was then considered, and became a power in State politics. Through the interest of Curtin he was given charge of the Chambersburg Repository. He was first elected to the legislature in 1857. He was re-elected the following year, which brought out the true brilliancy of his political acumen. As chairman of the Republican State committee he engineered the campaign through the bitter fight of civil strife, reached the State Senate himself, elected Curtin to the governorship and delivered the State to Lincoln.

During the Civil War he was one of the sturdy, picturesque figures of Pennsylvania politics and did much to guard the interests of the Union. In 1873 Mr. McClure sought to become mayor of Philadelphia, making a brave fight against the machine. He was defeated by a small majority. It was then that he determined to reenter the field of journalism. After an attempt to secure the Press at Philadelphia from Colonel Forney, who had been his partisan in politics for years, Mr. McClure started the Times. This paper, although new and fighting against well-established and wealthy rivals, made excellent progress because of the originality instilled into its columns by Mr. McClure's efforts. He not only raised the tone of the newspapers from the dull routine that had characterized the press of Philadelphia, but also set a new standard for salaries for the newspaper workers of the city.

HOOSIER BANKER ENDS HIS LIFE

Jesse Fletcher of a Well-Known Family Kills Himself.

Jesse Fletcher, a wealthy business man of Indianapolis, Ind., committed suicide at Turtle Lake, near Alpena, Mich., where there is a widely known fishing and hunting club. Mr. Fletcher belonged to one of the most prominent of the old Indiana families. For many years it has been important in the financial development of the State, and the Fletchers were among the first bankers to co-operate in the beginning of business in the Middle West. Jesse Fletcher was a capitalist and interested financially in many directions. The amount of his fortune is not known, but it is not believed that it was loss of money that led to his suicide. He was a man of middle age, unmarried and of retiring disposition.

WELL; SENT TO LEPER COLONY.

Ten Supposed Victims Found, After Years, Not to Have Disease.

After some of them had spent twenty years of their life in the leper settlement on the Island of Molokai, ten of eleven supposed lepers who were returned to Honolulu at the instance of the territorial legislative committee for re-examination, have been found free of the disease. Of these two are boys of 6 and 7 years, but the others vary in age from 27 to 79. A pathetic feature of the re-examination is the probability that some of the older patients will petition to be returned to the island, as they have been shut off from the world and their friends so long that they have no place to go. A few of the patients were sent to the settlement before the bacteriological test for leprosy was discovered, and it is believed that in some cases a natural cure has been effected.

Two Railways Are Fined.

The Missouri Pacific Railroad and its subsidiary line, the Iron Mountain, entered a plea of guilty in the federal court in Little Rock, on the indictments recently returned against them. Judge Trieber assessed a fine of $7,500 in each case. The railroads were indicted in fifty-eight counts each of making concessions to firms.

Student, in Debt, Ends Life.

Despondent because he was behind with his board and did not have clothes good enough for commencement week, Essel Sisk, 16 years old, of Dixon, Ky., a student at Bethel College, in Russellville, Ky., committed suicide by shooting himself through the head.

Florida to Part Races on Train.

The Florida House has passed the Senate bill providing for separation of the races on railroad trains and street cars, and it now goes to the Governor for his signature.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Trade maintains sustained progress and seasonable activity marks the leading industries, although capacity is not yet entirely engaged. Crop reports impart much strength to the outlook. Wheat cutting has started and nature is busy raising what promises to be the most valuable grains ever grown.

Heavy June settlements at the banks were attended without any important trading defaults. The demand for money is wider, and this gives the discount rate a firmer tone, but choice commercial paper is readily negotiated without increased cost. An encouraging feature of current operations is the enlarging use of funds for manufacturing and investment purposes.

Warmer weather brings better demand in the leading retail lines, and stocks of lightweight apparel and footwear now move out satisfactorily. Reorders are noted in wholesale dry goods and other staples, while a fair aggregate is booked for the interior for fall and winter goods. Mail orders from local territory and more distant points compare favorably in the aggregate with this time last year.

Less difficulty is met with as to datings and credits, more buyers arranging for the best discount terms. The recent improved demands for furniture, woolens, jewelry and food products gather more force.

Manufacturing now shows more distinctly the recovery in production, and there are increasing movements of finished products from the mills and factories. The markets for raw materials reflect wider absorption and firm prices. Railroad contracts come forward freely for rails, cars and other equipment.

Bank clearings for five days, $252,296,999, exceed those of the corresponding period in 1908 by 19.9 per cent, and compare with $264,869,797 for six days in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 25, against 26 last week, 22 in 1908 and 29 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 6, against 8 last week, 5 in 1908 and 6 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review.

NEW YORK.

All in all the business situation presents many favorable features, but there is still an underlying feeling of conservatism, and while less is heard of the influence of tariff changes on future trade, there is still apparent a disposition to await the outcome of present legislative action and a clearer view as to possible crop yields. Among the leading industries the activity in iron and steel is still a subject of interest and May business in finished lines is claimed to have surpassed the like month of any previous year and to have been superior in tonnage placed to any month for two years past. Wool is quieter, but no less strong. Leather prices are very strong, reflecting the strength of hides and reports of closely held stocks, but shoes, while being ordered more freely, are not selling as heavily for fall as expected.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with June 3 were 191, against 205 last week, 225 in the like week of 1908, 155 in 1907, 162 in 1906 and 194 in 1905. Business failures for the week in Canada number 26, which compares with 22 last week and 32 last year.—Bradstreet's.

A TALE OF A CARAVAN

By

Robert Buchanan

CHAPTER XXI.

A week passed away. The shadow of the Caravan no longer fell on the green meadow by the lake, and the struggling population of Aberglyn, unsuspicious of foul play, had already forgotten both the Caravan and the owner.

And if facts were to be taken into consideration in estimating the extent of her memory, Matt, too, had forgotten. It was common talk now, that she, the grammarless castaway, the neglected protege of William Jones, was to be married to the master of the great house! Nay, the very day was fixed; and that very day was only two sunrises distant; and Monk, of Monkshurst, had in his pocket a special license, which he had procured, at an expenditure of five pounds, from London.

Doubtless, in any more populous locality the affair would have occasioned no little scandal, and many ominous shakings of the head, but the inhabitants were few and far between, and had little or no time for idle gossiping. The coast guardsmen and their wives were the only individuals who exhibited any interest, and even their excitement was faint nad evanescent, like the movements of a fish in a shallow and unwholesome pool.

But the really extraordinary part of the whole affair was the conduct of Matt herself. Apparently quite cured of her former repugnance to a union with Monk, she made no objection whatever to the performance of the ceremony, and laughed merrily when she was informed that the day was fixed. Monk, in his grim, taciturn way, was jubilant. He came to and fro constantly, and assumed the manners of a lover. Had he been less bent on one particular object, two things might have struck him as curious: (1) That Matt, though she had consented to marry him, steadfastly refused to wear his ring, or accept any other presents; and (2) that she still shrank with persistent and ill-disguised dislike, from his caresses.

It was now late in the month of August, and the weather was broken by troublous winds and a fretful moon. For several weeks William Jones, in his mortal terror, had refrained from visiting the cave; he had never set his foot therein; indeed, since the night of the assassination. At last he could bear the suspense no longer. Suppose some one else had discovered his treasure, and robbed him? Suppose some subterranean change had obliterated the landmarks or submerged the cavern! Suppose a thousand dreadful things! Tired of miserable supposition, William determined, despite his terror, to make sure.

So late one windy and rainy night he stole forth with his unlit lantern, and fought his way in the teeth of half a gale to the familiar place, which he found, however, with some little difficulty. He was neither superstitious nor imaginative, but throughout the journey he was a prey to nameless terrors. Every gust of wind went through his heart like a knife; every sound of wind or sea made that same heart stop and listen. Only supreme greed and miserly anxiety led him on. But at last he gained the cave, within which there was a sound as of clashing legions, clarions shrieking, drums beating, all the storm and stress of the awful waters clashing on the cliffs without, and boiling with unusual screams through the black slit between the cave and the Devil's Caldron.

Trembling, with perspiration standing in great beads on his face, he searched the cave for the corpse of the murdered man, expecting to find it well advanced in decomposition. Strange to say, however, it had disappeared.

William Jones was at once relieved and alarmed; relieved because he was spared a horrible experience; alarmed because he could not account for the disappearance. A little reflection, however, suggested that one of those tidal waves so common on the coast might have risen well up into the cavern, washed away the body from its place on the shingle, and carried it away in the direction of the Caldron. "In which case," he reflected, "them coast guard chaps would find it some day among the rocks or on the shore, and think it had been drowned in the way of natur'."

Satisfied that everything else was undisturbed, he retired as hastily as possible, sealed up the entrance to the cavern, and ran hastily home.

The morning of the marriage came—a fine, sunny morning. An open dog-cart belonging to Monk, and driven by one of his servants, stood at William Jones' door, and close to it a light country cart, borrowed by William Jones himself from a neighboring farmer. The population, consisting of an aged coast guardsman, two coast guardsmen's wives, and half a dozen dejected children, crowded in front of the cottage.

The bridegroom, attired in decent black, with a flower in his buttonhole, stood waiting impatiently in the garden. Despite the festive occasion, he had a gloomy and hang-dog appearance. Presently there emerged from the door William Jones, attired in a drowned seaman's suit several sizes too large for him, and wearing a chimney-pot hat and a white rosette. Leaning on his arm was Matt, dressed in a dress of blue silk, newly made for her, out of damaged materials supplied by Jones, by one of the coast guard women, a light straw hat with blue ribbons to match, and a light lace shawl. Behind this pair hobbled William Jones' father, whose costume was nautical like his son's, but more damaged, and who also sported a chimney pot hat and a white rosette.

The crowd gave a feeble cheer. Matt looked round and smiled, but mingled with her smile there was a kind of vague anxiety and expectation.

It was arranged that Monk should drive Matt in the dog-cart, while William Jones and his father followed in the commoner vehicle. At Pencroes, where the ceremony was to be performed, they were to meet with one Mr. Penarvon, a country squire and kindred spirit of Monk's, who had promised to be "best man."

Monk took the reins, while Matt got in and seated herself beside him, the groom getting up behind; and away they went along the sand-choked road followed by Jones and his father.

The day was bright and merry, but Matt never thought of the old proverb; "Merry is the bride that the sun shines on;" she was too busy examining the prospect on every side of her. All at once, as the bridal procession wound round the edge of the lonely lake, she uttered a cry of delight. There, standing in its old place by the lake-side, was the Caravan.

Monk looked pale—there was something ghostly in the reappearance even of this inanimate object. He was a man of strong nerve, however, and he speedily smiled at his own fears.

As they approached the spot they saw Tim standing near the vehicle in conversation with two strange gentlemen—one a little man in black broadcloth, the other a tall, broad-shouldered fellow wearing a light overcoat and a wideawake hat. Directly the procession approached, this group separated, and its three members walked severally to the road, he with the wideawake hat standing right in the center of the road quietly smoking a cigar.

As the dog cart came up he held up his hand. Unable to proceed without running him down, Monk pulled up angrily. "What is it? Why do you block the road?" he cried fiercely.

"Excuse me, governor," returned the other, coolly. "Mr. Monk, of Monkshurst, I believe?"

"That's my name."

"Sorry to trouble you on such a day, but I should like a few words with you."

"I can not stay—I am going to be married!"

"So I heard," said the man, lifting his hat and bowing with a grin to Matt. "Glad to see you, miss. How do you do? But the fact is, Mr. Monk, my business won't keep. Be good enough to step this way."

CHAPTER XXII.

Full of some unaccountable foreboding, inspired partly by the stranger's suave, yet determined manner, partly by the reappearance of the Caravan, Monk alighted, and followed the other across the grass to the close vicinity of the house on wheels. The little elderly man followed, and the man who had first spoken went through the ceremony of introduction.

"This is Mr. Monk, sir. Mr. Monk, this gentleman is Mr. Lightwood, of the firm of Lightwood & Lightwood, solicitors, Chester."

"And you,—who are you?" demanded Monk, with his old savagery.

"My name is Marshall, Christian name John, though my friends call me Jack," answered the other, with airy impudence. "John Marshall, governor, of the detective force."

Monk now went pale indeed. But recovering himself, he cried, "I know neither of you. I warned you that I was in haste. What do you want? Out with it."

The little man now took up the conversation, speaking in a prim, business-like voice, and occasionally referring to a large note book which he carried.

"Mr. Monk, you are, I am informed, the solye heir male of the late Colonel Monk, your cousin by the father's side, who was supposed to have died in the year 1862."

"Yes, that is true. What then?"

"On the report of his death, his name being included in an official list of officers killed and wounded in action, and it being understood that he died without lawful issue, you laid claim to the demesne of Monkshurst, in Chelshire, and that of the same name in Angleses. Your claim was recognized, and in 1865 you took possession."

"Well. Have you detained me to hear only what I already knew?"

"Pardon me, I have not finished. I have now to inform you that you inherited under a misconception—first, because Colonel Monk was married and had issue; secondly, because he did not die in India, but reached the shores of England, where he perished in the shipwreck of the vessel Trinidad on Christmas day, 1864."

Monk was livid. At this moment Jones, who had been watching the scene from a distance, came over, panting and perspiring in ill-concealed terror.

"Mr. Monk, what's the matter? Look ye now, we shall be late for the wedding."

As he spoke, Marshall, the detective, clapped him playfully on the shoulder.

"How d'ye do, William Jones? I've often heard of you, and wished to know you. Pray stop where you are. I'll talk to you presently."

"I don't know what you mean," Monk now said, with dogged desperation, "with all this rigmarole, Mr. Lightwood, or whatever your name is. It seems to me you are simply raving. If I am not my cousin's heir, who is, tell me that?"

"His daughter," said the man, quietly.

"He never married, and he never had a daughter."

"His daughter, an infant twelve or fourteen months old, sailed to England with him, was shipwrecked with him, but saved by a special Providence, and has since been living in this place under the name of Matt Jones."

"Your intended bride, you know," added Marshall, with an insinuating smile. "Hullo, where is the young lady?"

Monk looked round toward the dog-cart and on every side, but Matt was nowhere to be seen.

"I see her go into that theer cart," said William Jones.

"Call her," cried Monk. "I'll stay no longer here. Listen to me, you two. Whether you are telling truth or lies, that girl is going to become my wife—I have her guardian's consent, and she herself. I may tell you, fully appreciates the honor I am doing her."

"Indeed!" said Mr. Lightwood, smiling. "Unfortunately I, as Miss Monk's legal adviser, must have a say in the matter. Doubtless this marriage would be a very pretty arrangement for keeping the late Colonel Monk's fortune and property in your possession, but I can not conscientiously approve of the young lady's marriage to an assassin."

"An assassin?—what—what do you mean?" gasped Monk, stagering as if from a blow.

"Tell him, Mr. Marshall."

"All right, sir. Well, you see, Mr Monk, of Monkshurst," continued the detective, grimly, yet playfully, "you're accused of making away with—murdering in fact—a young gentleman who came to Aberglyn a few weeks ago in that little house on wheels; and this nice friend of yours" (here he again slapped William Jones on the shoulder) "is accused of being your accomplice."

"No, no. I never done it! I'm innocent, I am!" cried William Jones. "Tell 'em, Mr. Monk, tell 'em—I'd nowt to do with it."

"Silence, you fool," said the other; then he added, turning on his accusers, "You are a couple of madmen, I think! I know nothing of the young man you speak of. I have heard that he is missing, that is all; but there is no evidence that any harm has come to him, for his body has not been found."

Woman's Sphere

Cover Up Your Troubles.

Did you ever know a person who made it a business to parade her woes? If you did, she never saw you if you saw her first. Our stock of sympathy is limited and soon dries up with excessive demands upon it. What is the good of parading troubles, anyway? Does it make the burden lighter to be constantly holding it before our own eyes, or to pour it into uninterested ears? There are times when, if we can discuss our woes with the right person, the sting may be eased. To brood in silence is neither healthy nor wise. What we need is to learn the difference between hiding our troubles from the world and keeping them hidden only to corrode our very soul. What most of us need is to learn to keep unpleasant things to ourselves. Try just for a day leaving unsaid the word of complaint or repining. When one's attention is called to it, it is surprising how many of our pin pricks we needlessly shift to the shoulders of others.

Covering up our troubles is like burying tubers in the sand—bringing them to the light causes shriveling and uselessness. Keep them well hidden and they keep sweet and wholesome. Parading trouble is not only a bore to the listener, but makes for selfishness in us. When we have our vision trained on our own woes our horizon is soon too narrowed to see the worse ill of our neighbors. Thus do we deprive ourselves of the help of contrasts to lighten our bitterness. If you seize each opportunity to tell of your aches and pains, your wrongs, real or imaginary, you will steadily lose friends. Even those who take the most interest and have our welfare closest to heart cannot stand the strain of chronic grumbling. If only as a sympathy winner—cover up your troubles. There is no one who gets more feeling of compassion from her friends than the woman who has griefs which she pluckily hides.

Sweet Peas Make Sweet Hat.

A positive riot of flowers is worn upon some of the hats. The crown is massed with sweet peas of all shades of pink and purple, and below them there is a fringe of green leaves posed upon a background of black velvet. The brim of the hat is made of yellow straw.

The Pantaloon Skirt.

Maid of Athens, ere we part,
Never mind about my heart;
Think not that it did not hurt
When you took my hat and shirt.

Now they vow ere many moons
You'll be wearing pantaloons!
Maid of Athens, it is feared
You will even raise a beard!

Maid of Athens, ere we part,
Hear the pleading from my heart—
Don't compel the men, I pray,
To wear what you throw away.

—Chicago Post.

Do You Know That It Takes—

One teaspoonful of soda to one cup of molasses?

One teaspoonful of soda to one pint of sour milk?

One teaspoonful of mixed herbs to one quart of soup stock?

One teaspoonful of salt to one quart of soup stock or two quarts of flour?

One tablespoonful each of chopped vegetables to one quart of soup stock?

Two rounding or four even teaspoonfuls of baking powder to one quart of flour?

What's in an Initial?

Why, in writing to an unknown person on any matter of business requiring an answer, do so many people fan to give the Christian name in full? An initial alone conveys no idea of the sex of the writer and makes the communication both awkward and difficult to answer. The J. in the business signature of "J. Tomkins," as the writer does not seem to realize, may stand equally well for John or Joseph, Jane or Julia, and the addressee sits down in embarrassing uncertainty as to whether to begin the reply with "Dear Sir," "Dear Madam" or "My dear Mrs." or "Mr. Tompkins." Here is a case in which brevity is not the soul of wit.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

New gowns from Paris have corsets made in them.

Ribbon watch chains are quite the thing just now.

Coats for girls' suits are plain and almost straight.

When you cannot afford to buy jewels use beads.

Some of the new parasols have long directoire handles.

Jet chains are popular with lockets of the same material.

Many corduroy walking suits are seen in the new shades.

In spite of the increasing popularity of the stock, the white turnover collar is still in good style.

All the high class models and gowns of this season show a small amount of ornamentation and utmost elegance of line.

Colored foulards with a black dot in place of the more familiar white dot have found favor in Paris.

A locket down the center of the back when wearing a low-cut frock will make the neck look thinner.

Among the novel Paris hosiery there are black pure thread silk stockings with insteps worked in colors.

The most popular of the taupes and smoke grays and those which are most becoming have a slight reddish cast.

There is a fringe effect upon the newest purses of leather and suede, and it is a fad to have them of the shade of the gown.

Facts About Bread and Flour.

Four in the United States is seldom adulterated.

Yeast is a minute fungus which grows in nutritive material when it is in a state of moisture.

Macaroni and spaghetti are made by mixing hard wheat flour and hot water into a stiff paste, which is then molded and dried.

Hard wheat yields a large amount of gluten, soft wheat yields less gluten and more starch. Hard wheat flours hold a larger amount of water than soft wheat flours, and they therefore make a larger loaf.

To test good flour, first note its color. It should be white, with a faint yellow tinge. If pressed in the hand, it should fall loosely apart; if it stays in lumps, it has too much moisture in it. It should not feel too smooth between the fingers, but rather rough particles. Flour should have a sweet, nutty flavor.

To Render Suet

Many housekeepers are deterred from the economical practice of rendering the suet which the butcher gives with meat on account of the disagreeable odor which is likely to result through the house. Yet beef suet is the best of animal fats for frying and cannot be obtained in any other way than by rendering it at home. To melt it without smell, keep for the purpose a small pot with a tightly fitting cover, and reduce the suet over a simmering burner or a flame turned as low as possible. Melted slowly in this way in a covered pan no odor will result.

Snap Shots at Women

Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman's book, "Women and Economics," has been translated into eight languages.

A bill to make women eligible as school directors has been defeated in the Missouri Senate by a vote of 15 to 2.

Mrs. Fred Wilmerding, once a leader of fashion in Paris, has opened a curiosity shop in Florence, hoping thereby to retrieve her fortunes.

Mme. Curie, who helped her husband to discover radium, has just been elected a corresponding member of the St. Petersburg Academy of Science.

The Belgian government has passed a law which bestows a decoration on a house servant who has been in the employ of one family for twenty-five successive years.

The record for cotton picking in this country is probably held by Miss Margaret Montgomery of Stillwater, Okla. One day last fall Miss Montgomery picked 700 pounds of cotton.

To Save the Babies.

A systematic, scientific, city-wide campaign against diseases which kill the babies during the summer has been inaugurated in Chicago. Volunteer instructors will visit homes of children and instruct mothers in feeding and caring for infants. The milk commission will see that certified milk is properly cared for in homes. Five out-door tent stations, each accommodating ten babies, will be provided.

Gift for Grandmother.

A pretty and very useful present for the grandmother of the house or any elderly lady whose birthday is to be celebrated is a housepocket of heavy black silk to hang from the belt by ribbons or by a gun metal chatelaine hook. The bag itself is divided into two compartments, the one in front for the pocket handkerchief, the back one forming a handy case for the spectacles.

Ants in the House.

An old Brooklyn housekeeper is authority for the statement that ants of any sort can be routed by the free use of air-slaked lime. Sprinkle freely in the places they frequent and they will leave at once. A Missouri remedy for ants consists in mixing a little tartar emetic with a little quantity of powdered sugar. Put in a saucer, moisten with water to a cream and place where ants are troublesome. If the water dries away add more. This is said to be unfailing. Garden ants can be driven away by sprinkling ashes saturated with coal oil about their haunts. Another good way is to locate their nests, place quick lime at the mouth and wash it down with boiling hot water.

LOUNGING ROBES AND DRESSING SACQUES FOR SUMMER WEAR.

Millinery

Every hat sets low on the head.

Giant bows are popular, pinned close to hats.

Hat ornaments are large and conspicuous.

Children's hats turn up or down; they are rarely straight.

Hats and not hair this season are to be considered a woman's crowning glory.

In spite of the great flower vogue, ribbons seem to have usurped a first place on spring hats.

Many children's hats have embroidered scalloped borders of color on white, or of white on color, as the case may be.

Two of the prettiest shades of millinery are argont, a demurely soft silver, and alezan, a chestnut brown with a suspicion of pink in it.

Erasing Powder.

By thorough mixture of equal parts of alum, sulphur, amber and saltpeter, a good erasing powder can be produced. When using shake a little of the powder on a fresh ink spot or fresh writing and rub it off with a clean cloth. The ink will disappear completely.

Home-Made Fly Potion.

Mix together one tablespoonful cream, the same amount of powdered black pepper and a tablespoonful brown sugar. Put in a saucer, darken the room save one window and in that set the saucer containing the mixture.

Weather Strips from Old Suspenders

Use the castoff suspenders for making weather strips; they are durable, for doors and windows. Also, if sewed across the ends of carpets, matting and rugs laid around on the floor it will keep them firm and straight, at the same time protecting the ends.

Save Rubber Bands.

Often a rubber band comes in handy at home. Instead of laying them away, place them on the doorknobs, where they are unnoticeable, and can easily be found.

Smiles of the Day

The Poor Loser.

Mrs. Newlywed (indignantly)—You are the breadwinner of this family.

Mr. Newlywed (despairingly)—Well, considering the kind of bread you give me, I should call myself the loser.—Harvard Lampoon.

His Answer.

Pat, who was noted for a quick tongue, was digging potatoes when the parish priest came by. By way of a pleasant salutation the priest said:

"Good mornin' to ye, Pat, and what kind of p'rtatoes are ye diggin'?"

"Raw ones, your riv-rence."

"Och, ye're so smart, I'll just give ye a question on the catechism. What is baptism?"

"It used to be 4 shillin's afore ye came, but now it's 20 shillin's."—The Circle.

When There's a Mixed Brood.

The Duckling—Yes, I've been trying to teach him to swim, ma'am; but he'll do better as a diver—he stayed under an awful long time.

Terrible Candor.

"What part of my book did you most enjoy?" asked the authorette as she brushed her hair over her eyes.

And after a momen'ts reflection Miss Cayenne answered:

"The cover design."—Exchange.

He Was Near It.

A small boy went into a drug store, wrinkled his face and rubbed his head in an effort to remember something that had escaped him.

"Say," he began, "will you tell me the name of the place where we Americans have so many soldiers?"

"Fort Sheridan?"

"Oh, no; it's farther away than that and a new place."

"The Philippines?"

"That ain't just it, but it's somewhere around there."

"Perhaps you mean Manila?"

"Manila! That's right! I knew I would get it after a while. I want a bottle of Manila extract for flavoring. They're goin' to have ice cream."—Boston Herald.

Barbara Was Overlooked.

Four-year-old Barbara went to church with her two sisters and came home crying.

"What is the matter, dear, inquired her mother.

"He preached a whole s-sermon—about—M-Mary and Martha," sobbed Barbara, "and—never said—a—word about me."

Her Model.

Daisy—What do you do when a man steps on your dress?

Dora—I look as Fred does when I ask him to pay for it.

Not a Suffragette.

He—What would women do with the franchise if they had it?

She—What's a franchise?

Sun Spots.

"Who is that neglected-looking little boy with that awfully dirty face?"

"He is the child of Professor Sonnenshein, the noted astronomer who lives over the way.'

"Oh, is he? Come here, little boy. Run home and tell your father he doesn't need his telescope to see spots on the sun."—Baltimore Sun.

Childish Wisdom.

Lady—Will you send this rug on approval?

Salesman—Certainly, ma'am.

Little Girl (who is with her mother)—Hadn't you better tell him to be sure and get it there on time, mamma? You know we give the party-to-morrow night.—Life.

True Resignation.

Old Maid—Is it really true that marriages are made in heaven?

Doctor—Yes, I believe so.

Old Maid (resignedly)—Oh, then, doctor, you needn't call again.

Truck.

"I guess I have dyspepsia."

"What makes you think so?"

"Something in my stomach keeps rumbling like a delivery wagon on a stone pavement."

"May be it's that truck you ate for supper."—Cleveland Leader.

Horticulture.

"Who is this wizard fellow, Luther Burbank, any way?"

"Why, he's the chap that's all the time getting up new trimmings for women's hats!"—Puck.

Courteous Highwayman.

"You don't mean to say you would accept this old timepiece?" faltered the man who was being held up. "Why, it is only an apology for a watch."

"That's all right, friend," laughed the bold highwayman, "I'll accept the apology."—Chicago News.

So Sudden.

She—Yes; I adore a big, broad-shouldered, brainy, handsome-looking man.

He—Oh, darling! This is so sudden.—Columbia Jester.

A Trifle Acid.

"In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love."

"Yes," said the sarcastic damsel, "after the time for Christmas presents, valentines and Easter flowers has passed."—Kansas City Journal.

The Way Out.

"Think, love!" said Mrs. Gobsa Golde, "I ordered a dinner gown, and that tiresome dressmaker has sent me a traveling suit."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" Gobsa Golde demanded.

"The only thing is for us to go abroad again," she sighed.

A Prize Surprise.

At a party composed of adults it was proposed that the entertainment consist of the games that prevailed in the good old days of childhood—"Post Office," "Tin-tin," "London Bridge," etc. Finally a prize was offered for the person who could make the "ugliest face." The judges awarded the prize to an old maid.

"You win," they said, handing her a box of bon bons.

"I will thank you," she replied indignantly, "to understand that I was not playing."—Kansas City Star.

Nothing Like Being Obliging.

Customer—Waiter, isn't there something peculiar about these oysters?

Waiter—Is there, sir? Try another, sir, and if that's off, I'll change the order.—Life.

Got Them Guessing.

"Now that they're married I presume they're happy."

"Yes, but their folks are all guessing. His relatives can't figure out what he sees in her, and her folks can't understand what she sees in him."

Not Hers.

Old Lady—Conductor, is this my car?

Conductor (affably)—No, ma'm, this car belongs to the Boston Elevated.—Harvard Lampoon.

Cornered.

"I hope," said the woman of precise ideas, "that you never listen to servants' gossip."

"I can't help myself," answered her nephew. "I'm a juror in an unwritten law case."—Exchange.

Somewhat Surprised.

"I hear your daughter is going to marry a duke."

"Yes; a love match."

"Do you mean to tell me she gets him for nothing?"—Washington Herald.

The Exceptions.

"Binks has a fine new apartment."

"Everything stationary in it, I suppose."

"Absolutely everything—except his wife and the cook."—Harper's Bazar.

Often Heard of Him.

Teacher—Johnny, who was the greatest man that ever lived?

Johnny—I don't know for sure, but I think it was ma's first husband.—London Illustrated Bets.

Not Far From Pittsburg.

He was from Pittsburg, and wanted to telephone to a town about thirty miles away. He asked the girl on the switchboard to get him long distance and followed it up with asking the price.

"It will cost you fifty cents for three minutes," she said sweetly.

"Fifty cents! Ye gods!" cried the stranger. "I don't want to buy stock in the telephone company. I only want to talk a minute or so. Why, out in Pittsburg we can call up all hades for fifty cents!"

"Yes, I know sir," replied the girl "but that is within your city limits."—N. Y. Telegraph.

Putting on Airs.

"When country people come to town they talk a god deal about the purer air they breathe at home."

"Yes, they put on a good many fresh airs."—Kansas City Times.

Practical Innovation.

"Why did they introduce girl waiters in the new restaurant?"

"Possibly because they thought girl waiters would be more fetching."—Baltimore American.

Not a Fair Test.

"Is he a young man of brains?"

"I really can't say. I've only met him in society."—Judge.

Something She Doesn't Have to Do.

"I'll bet that young girl's parents keep three hired girls and a cook."

"What makes you think so?"

"She says she just loves housework and could live in the kitchen."—Detroit Free Press.

Not a Contradiction.

Mr. H. Peck—Life is full of contradictions.

Mrs. P.—And I say it isn't.—Philadelphia Star.

Keepsakes.

Washington Irving, who wrote the following lines on the value of trifles, evidently believed in them as emblems of friendship:

"There is something, after all, in those trifles that friends bestow upon each other which is an unfailing indication of the place the giver holds in the affections. I would believe that one who preserved a lock of hair, a simple flower or any trifle of my bestowing loved me, though no show was made of it, while all the protestations in the world would not win my confidence in one who set no value on such little things. Trifles they may be, but it is by such that character and disposition are oftenest revealed."

Gets Them.

Church—I hear your doctor's got three automobiles?

Gotham—That's right. He's bound to get the people coming or going.—Yonkers Statesman.

The prospect of everlasting life looks a good deal better to the average man than an everlasting sermon sounds.

Time to Check Immigration

THE Bureau of Immigration tells us that "three times as many immigrants reached the United States in April of this year as in April, 1908," and that "Italy contributed the largest number of aliens." Yes, and we may add they came from the poorest part of Italy.

Now that we have a Commissioner of Immigration of whose tried ability and true Americanism we had complete assurance in his former service in the same office, may we not expect some improvement in the matter of greater restriction of this incoming tide of aliens, which, like the members of the Black Hand, are almost sure to be for us not a benefit but a curse?

No doubt the president of the New York City Mission Tract Society is right when he advocates "the stoppage of all immigration for a period of ten years is advisable, so that the country could assimilate its present population."

Mr. Williams, the present Commissioner of Immigration, declared when serving in this office years ago, that "We cannot afford for mere pecuniary gain to endanger our national ideals, institutions and character, and our own wage earners must not be driven out of employment by compulsory competition with foreigners of an unduly low standard of living."

Now, at this time, when in this great overcrowded city, the congestion of population is a direct cause of enough tuberculosis and criminal degenerates to give concern to even the most heedless of our citizens, must we not, while planning to obtain a permanent city planning commission, also plan for some severe restrictive measures as to the entrance into our country of any and all unfit aliens?

Indiscriminate and even half restrained immigration is costing this state millions of dollars in caring for insane and otherwise defective aliens.

A law forbidding under a penalty the landing of any Italian who could not show a certificate from the mayor or head of the police of the town from which he came that he is known to be a respectable man and under no ban of suspicion might help to solve a serious problem.

Obituary

After a lingering illness of several months Mrs. Mary A. McNabb departed this life June 1, 1909, aged 38 years, 6 months and 6 days.

Mrs. McNabb was born at Edgerton, Allen county, Indiana, on December 25, 1871. She was united in marriage to Mr. Frank McNabb, November 21, 1892. To this union was born one child, which died in infancy. After her marriage she moved to Butler, where she has since resided. She leaves to mourn her departure a husband, one brother and two sisters.

Mrs. McNabb was a woman of amiable character and by the practice of many womanly virtues won for herself a host of friends. She was a member of the Christian church for thirteen years. Her faith in Christ during the last days of her life is a testimony to the power of divine help for every experience of life. Her passing from this life might be expressed in the poet, Bryant, "As one who wraps the draperies of her couch about her and lies down to pleasant dreams."

Funeral services were held at the Christian church on Friday afternoon, June 4, S. S. Braden officiating. The Royal Neighbors of which Mrs. McNabb was a member attended in a body and read the funeral ritual of the order at the home and at the grave. Interment at the Butler cemetery.

A Disappointed Jury

A south Missouri man recently was tried on a charge of assault. The state brought into court as the weapons used a rail, an ax, a pair of tongs, a saw and a rifle. The defendant's counsel exhibited as the other man's weapons a scythe blade, a pitchfork, a pistol and a hoe. The jury's verdict is said to have been: "Resolved, That we, the jusy, would have given one dollar to have seen the fight."—Bellman.

Appointments of Frank G. Hoskinson as postmaster at Montpelier and S. P. Louys at Stryker were sent to the senate by President Taft last week and the appointments have been confirmed. Mr. Hoskinson was the republican candidate for auditor last year and had no opposition for the postmastership. He succeeds Mr. Halloway who has held the position two terms. Mr. Louys has been postmaster at Stryker eleven years and the present appointment is for four years. The Stryker office has been advanced from the fourth class to the third class.

The recent heavy rains flooded some low land in many fields and destroyed corn that had been planted, making replanting necessary. This also occurred in many upland fields in places not sufficiently drained.

Recently John Tappen and wife made a visit to Steuben county with friends and relatives there. They report less rain where they were than near Butler and the farm work farther advanced than here.

S. S. Casebere and some others have planned to attend the Sunday school convention at Garrett Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, but may be prevented by the weather.

The author of "An Unnecessary Expenditure" recently published in the HERALD says that some one made a brief reply in a recent issue of the Record, making great mistakes and errors. He says he did not advise using the basement of the old infirmary for a wash house, but that he suggested using the basement of the new building for that purpose, as it could not be used for a cellar. He further says the article in the Record did not meet the case at issue on its merits, that an unnecessary expenditure is either right or wrong and that all good citizens should take a stand for what is right and for the general good. This, in substance, is written by request and the correspondent requests that it be published.

So light running
that your "youngest" can now mow the lawn
without help.

KEEN KUTTER Mowers are fast cutting and easy running because of the triple gear and the fine ball bearings. A KEEN KUTTER will last longer than any mower on the market and is easily kept keen and sharp. To sharpen, merely reverse the blades and they sharpen themselves. A cheap mower will cost more in the end on account of repairs, will not do the work properly and will require twice as much labor.

The KEEN KUTTER is a money saver, a time saver, a temper saver—and will keep your lawn looking like velvet.

Eat What

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

Else you can't gain strength, nor can you strengthen your stomach if it is weak.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

But this food must be digested, and it must be digested thoroughly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today, and purchase a dollar bottle, and if you can honestly say, that you did not receive any benefits from it, after using the entire bottle, the druggist will refund your money to you without question or delay.

We will pay the druggist the price of the bottle purchased by you.

This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family.

We could not afford to make such an offer, unless we positively knew what Kodol will do for you.

It would bankrupt us.

The dollar bottle contains 2½ times as much as the fifty cent bottle.

Kodol is made at the laboratories of E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago.

Don't kick because you have to button your wife's waist. Be glad your wife has a waist and doubly glad you have a wife to button a waist for. Some men's wives have no waists to button. Some men's wives' waists have no buttons on to button. Some men's wives who have waists with buttons on to button don't care a continental whether they are buttoned or not. Some men don't have any wives with waists with buttons on to button, any more than a rabbit.

The American Steel and Steelplate company has posted notices in all its shops that after June 30, unions will not be recognized, and that workmen will be employed regardless of whether they belong to the union or not. On top of this it is also announced that there will be a reduction in wages. A big war will likely follow and a prolonged strike is anticipated. The generosity of the senate in providing a tariff on iron ore don't seem to have made any difference with the steel magnates except to make them a little bolder.

The Knox Republican suggests that, as a precaution, when you go to a hospital for a surgical operation you mark the locality of your ailment with charcoal. A girl went to a Harrisburg hospital to have her tonsils removed was sent to the appendicitis table by mistake. When she recovered from the anaesthetic her appendix was gone but her tonsils were still there. The doctors said it was only a matter of time until she would have had appendicitis anyway, so she was just one operation ahead. But nevertheless the charcoal mark is worth while for the patient who has no blood to spare. This recalls the story of the fellow's mother-in-law whose case was diagnosed by local doctors as appendicitis and who was sent by him to a hospital where an operation proved that the diagnosis was wrong, and that the old lady had appendicitis not at all. She was carefully sewn shut again and returned to her devoted and anxious son-in-law marked "Opened by Mistake.

Uncle Sam goes after the trusts and combines once in a while and makes them be good, while his postoffice department goes right on operating a "corner" in the printed envelope business to the detriment of the printers of the country. Not many years ago the postoffice department confined itself to printing return envelopes without the name of the firm, but now a big firm at Dayton, Ohio, prints the business card on stamped envelopes and the postoffice department acts as sales agent for the product, selling them at prices below what the printers can buy the plain envelopes at wholesale. Mr. Laushee says this is done to introduce them, but his argument is very thin. The printers of the country worked for years creating sentiment in favor of this form of envelopes and after the business was well developed, their dear Uncle Sam steps in and furnishes them at ruinously low prices, but one firm—the one at Dayton, receiving the benefit. The thousands of printing offices throughout the country are amply able to handle the printing business in their localities and competion insures a reasonable price to the users. The government has no more right to take business away from the printer than he has to furnish dry goods or groceries. We frequently hear the business men make a big noise about the mail order concerns and at the same time are buying envelopes of the government. Then is when we get a pain under the belt.

Kendallville is to have an amusement park. A steam launch was put on Lake Bixler, at the east side of the city, last week, and the manager of the city band conceived the idea of securing the beautiful grove across the lake from the water works park and opening it for a public park, with swings, lemonade and lunch stands, and other booths under their control, and here they would give band concerts every Sunday, the launch conveying the pleasure seekers across the lake. Now E. H. Sherman, who owns the grove, has taken an interest in the project, and will fit the grounds up, and they will be open to the people not only Sunday but every afternoon. It is a beautiful spot and will make a splendid resort.

Col. D. N. Foster has a remarkable memory—remarkably short. In address on postal savings banks Mr. Foster read the whole blooming scheme out of business and told how unreliable the goverment is and how in case of a panic the money of the country would be tied up and business would just go to eternal smash. Colonel Foster forgot evidently, that just eighteen months ago there wasn't a bank in Fort Wayne that could pay 10 cents on the dollar in cash and that the local institutions passed a rule not to cash individual checks in excess of $100 a day, while companies limited their payments to $10. He forgot how it was the government and not the banks that poured millions of cash into the commercial channel and at that only succeeded in partially relieving a condition that is still felt today. Neither did Colonel Foster make any reference to the fact that there is not a bank in Fort Wayne that can pay its depositors 50 cents on the dollar today. Colonel Foster knows all these things, but he simply forgot to tell about them.—Times Herald.

Charles Lucas, an attorney of Huntington, is in Washington City going over the general land office records to find, if possible, the original treaty between the government and the Miami tribe of Indians. The heirs of Chief Turtle allege that the treaty provided that none of the land should ever pass from the Indians or their heirs.

Newspapers all over the country are at last awakening to the great injustice of the government in printing envelopes in competion with them and, to make it even worse, doing it at a loss. The government has them printed by the million, ships them to their destination with no expense to the purchaser for postage and charges the bare cost of the stock and making of the envelope—no extra charge for the printing, no charge for postage. The postal deficit would be considerably reduced if the postage was added to the price of the envelopes. It is mighty small business for Uncle Sam to throw away money to compete with the printer in this way.

Thursday the supreme court at Indianapolis handed down a decision in the case of a boy who was killed at a street crossing in Terre Haute by a train running at a rate exceeding the speed limit. It was shown that the boy was proceeding carefully at the crossing and was on the alert, but that he failed to hear the train. Judge Hadley, who rendered the decision, said that to hold that a person should exercise more care than to walk carefully across the tracks and to be on the alert, would amount practically to vacation of the street for the railroad. He said that the boy had the right to presume that the railroad company would operate its trains within the the limits of the law and that if the company failed to do so, it was responsible for the boy's death.

THE FAKE BLACK HAND IN CHICAGO.

HOW INDIVIDUALS HAVE OVERWORKED A POPULAR METHOD OF GETTING REVENGE OR OBTAINING PUBLICITY.

THE fake Black Hand letter, the bane of the detective, the worry of the chief of police, the joy of the sensational reporter, the "subject" for the student in the psychology of suggestion and the nuisance to the general public, is one of the most remarkable developments in the criminal history of America during the last few years.

The fake Black Hand business was born in Chicago with the Nicoletti affair in 1904. This was merely a case of a Greek citizen writing himself a Black Hand letter, posing as a man in great fear, getting himself sworn in as a special policeman and going out with his police powers and taking a good fall out of another Greek citizen who had displeased him. Greek citizen No. 2 came out at the small end of a very little horn when the fake "Black Hand" got through with him.

By the psychology of suggestion, which is so strong in criminal circles and among the uneducated, the fake "Black Hand" letters have taken strange twists and turns since the Nicoletti affair.

It is estimated, the Chicago Inter Ocean declares, that no less than $15,000 have been collected from Italian citizens on the quiet by Black Hand fakers since the Nicoletti affair. These cheap criminals know that most people have swallowed the Black Hand fake bodily without stopping to consider its truth or falsity. There is no Black Hand society in America. There are certain members of the Mano Nera, the Silician Black Hand society, in Chicago—just sixteen of them, in fact—and they are well known to the detectives, but they have no organization. Nor have they been bold enough to try any of the cheap tactics attributable to the Black Hand since the first bona fide Black Hand case—the Spiro murder of 1903.

The Black Hand as it exists to-day in America is nothing more or less than a splendid example of the psychology of suggestion arising out of the Spiro murder and the subsequent publicity accorded to the Black Hand method of extorting money and gaining publicity. According to Dr. Roche of Harvard, one of the foremost authorities on the psychology of suggestion, such epidemics as the Black Hand letters may be traced almost directly to nervously disordered persons who have had the suggestion made to them by seeing wild-eyed Black Hand stories, written by cub reporters, in the daily press. It has become almost a mania with the cub reporter to see Black Hand societies every time he finds a murder of a foreign-speaking citizen. There are thirty-five cases of record in Chicago of persons writing themselves Black Hand letters and appealing to the police for protection and asking to be sworn in as special policemen, in order to save themselves from their dread tormentors. The real purpose is, of course, to get to be a policeman in order to take out a grudge against a neighbor.

The Black Hand crime is in almost every case a crime of deliberation, even when it springs from the crazy brain of a person who is properly a patient for a neuropathic institute. Hence the small percentage of Italians on police records where even bona fide Black Hand letters are looked up. The Black Hand itself has been stamped out in Italy. The Black Hands which have arisen in America are merely neuropathic cases of degeneracy, with a list of names as hybrid as the population of this melting pot. The Black Hand letter writer belongs in a hospital. There is no real Black Hand in America.

LET ME ENJOY.

Let me enjoy the Earth no less
Because the all-enacting Might
That fashioned forth its loveliness
Had other aims than my delight.

About my path there flits a Fair
Who throws me not a word or sign;
I will find charm in her loth air
And laud those lips not meant for mine.

From manuscripts of tender song
Inspired by scenes and souls unknown,
I'll pour out raptures that belong
To others, as they were my own.

And some day hence, toward Paradise
And all its blest—if such should be—
I will cast glad, afar-off eyes,
Tho' it contain no place for me.
—Thomas Hardy.

Once Upon a Time

"And the man."

"Gave way to temptation," he answered with a shrug, "committed the forgery, was discovered and punished acording to the law of the land."

"Poor fellow!" She spoke softly and with a faraway look in her eyes. "What became of him?"

The man did not answer immediately. The story was harder to tell than he had imagined, and he had a great mind to change the conversation, but then, knowing so much, she might as well know all.

"He changed his name," he continued, throwing stones into the stream at their feet, "and, going to a strange country, lived down the scandal. After a while he came back again, and his punishment began."

"CIRCUMSTANCES ALTER CASES!"

"I don't understand," she said.

"It was a girl," he replied. "Then his life's remorse came to him."

"Did she care for him?"

Woman-like, the hint at a romance interested her.

He shook his head.

"Could any woman care for a man whose story you have heard?"

"No," she spoke with decision—"no. She could pity him, her woman's heart would go out to the man whom everyone condemned, but she could never love him!"

He moved his position and turned his head in the opposite direction.

"She could never love him!" he echoed. After all, how could he have expected it to be otherwise?

"A woman," she continued, "likes a man to be strong, to be able to fight temptation, and however much sorrow she felt for him who had fallen, contempt would be present."

As he had said, the punishment had commenced. He rose to his feet and stood looking out over the broad expanse of fields facing them.

"Would you feel like that?" he asked with difficulty.

She did not answer directly, for she was weighing the subject over carefully.

"Yes," she replied at last, "I am afraid I should. You see I am no different to the rest of my sex"—here he would have liked to contradict her, but dare not—"for I admire a man who has a will of his own. The man of whom you have been speaking was weak at the best."

"Yes, he was weak," the man said.

"There are not many men in this world I could respect, but—but you are—one."

"I?"

He laughed as if the idea amused him, and there was silence. Then he turned and faced her.

"I was that man," he said quietly.

She knew now why he had not told her of his love before, knew his reason for the mysterious silence which had puzzled her and her relations.

"You."

"Yes, I."

He could not trust himself to say any more, only a feeling of something worse than misery had come over him, and he was prepared for a storm of reproaches to be hurled at him.

But the girl knew that with her lay the happiness of both their lives, and with a trembling heart she moved closer to him.

She felt so proud of him as he stood there, a still, white figure, and deep in her heart she was glad that he was not the saint that others had painted him.

And she slipped her hand into his, causing his eyes to fill with pain, to meet hers.

"After all," she said tenderly, holding up her lips invitingly and smiling as she saw his face change, "circumstances alter cases, Frank!"—Waverley Magazine.

Even in the face of the kind of hats they are wearing this spring, there are some women who claim they haven't their "rights."

How many purely ornamental people there are in every community!

SOME NEW DESIGNS FOR UNCLE SAM'S MONEY

THE eagle, the buffalo and the Indian have well-nigh disappeared from the Western prairies. Inexorable civilization found them unfit. Now they are to be banished from the crisp, green bank notes, their last resort, if the active imagination of boyhood be excepted. "Too easily counterfeited," is the terse explanation. Other changes tending toward uniformity and simplicity of design for United States notes and coin certificates are contemplated. At present there are nineteen different designs. Under the new plan, which embodies the ideas of officials of the Treasury Department, bankers, business men and currency experts, there will be but nine designs. The possibility of confusion will thus be reduced.

All classes of notes of each denomination will carry the same portrait. No portrait will appear on the notes of more than one denomination and the portraits selected are easily recognizable, excepting, perhaps, those of Salmon P. Chase and Alexander Hamilton. As Chase's likeness will be on the $500 note and Hamilton's on the $1,000 note, there is really no reason for anxiety concerning them. Men who handle money on such a scale as that ought to be as familiar with the lineaments of the Chief Justice and the first Secretary of the Treasury as the newest alien on these shores is with the portrait of Washington, which will mark the $1 bill. The $5 note will carry the portrait of the man whom some hardly count as second even to the father of his country—Lincoln. Cleveland, who, confronted by a break in his party, stood for sound money, will be used on the $10 notes. As no pictures are hung in the Louvre until after the death of the artist, so no portrait of a living individual is used on any of the currency issued from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in Washington. Hence the $10 notes will be the first to bear the picture of the only Democratic President since Buchanan. The $20 notes will have the portrait of Jackson, the $50 that of Grant, the $100 that of Franklin. Even the new pennies will no longer show poor Lo.

The artistic quality of either our metal money or the certificates is not a minor matter. In a certain sense the money used by a nation is the measure of its civilization. Always when men reach the stage of exchanging goods which implies a certain form of community life, they need a medium in which values of varying commodities may be expressed. The Indians used shells. Skins of the beaver and muskrat had in the early days of the Northern trapper a current value. Long ago the Germanic peoples expressed fines in cattle. Oxen were units of value and sheep decimal parts. Whale teeth among the Fijians; glass beads and brass wire in Africa; cacao beads in the land of the Aztecs; red feathers among the South Sea Islanders—all these have been used. Now that man has left the primitive stage far behind and mastered many arts, he strives to make his money safe, durable, beautiful. The men who are responsible for the contemplated changes in the notes are also striving to achieve th same result.

SOME MARRIED MEDITATIONS.

By Clarence L. Cullen.

It doesn't hurt any to express occasional surprise over the (maybe) fact that she still remains as a girl at heart.

Don't overlook the fact that the girthier and wheezier she gets the more she likes to have you call her "winsome" once in a while.

Why is it that the woman whose ears resemble sun-dried clams is the one who experiences the keenest hankering for those big pendant earrings?

It is difficult for a man to understand why he should be required to wear toeless hose when his wife puts in about nine hours a day needling Irish crochet lace.

Why is it that dandruffiness, linty-featheriness and general unkempt blowsiness are the unfailing exterior characteristics of the woman who wails about her "shattered ideals?"

The woman whose husband goes out before breakfast and fetches home an armful of lilacs for the breakfast table doesn't have to worry about his curves when he's out of her sight, either.

In the first place, a man couldn't be induced to eat fudge and pickles in alternate mouthfuls. But if he could be, he wouldn't loll around a little later on, wondering what in the wide world ailed his stomach.

Even a married man may be happy if he lets his wife have her own way.

Make a woman mad, and she is no more polite than a man.

WHY GOOD PAINT PREVENTS RUST.

By William H. Walker.

Inasmuch as both moisture and oxygen are necessary in order that corrosion may proceed, it can easily be seen that the duty of a protective paint is to exclude both of these elements. It is well known that a linseed oil film is an expansive porous structure acting somewhat as a sponge toward moisture and freely allowing the passage of oxygen. The function of the pigments employed in paint is therefore at least threefold. First, the more obvious one of imparting a color thereto; second, the most important one of filling up the pores or interstices in the oil film, thus rendering it as little impervious to moisture and air as possible, and, third, to aid the composite film in drying or oxidizing to a compact impenetrable covering. Very little work has as yet been done upon paints from this point of view, but with a clear conception of the factors involved in the corrosion of iron, an intelligent study is made possible and valuable results can be predicted with certainty.

The porosity of paint films containing no linseed oil, but composed of various bituminous materials which may be adapted for the purpose, is also a field which can be studied with profit, with a view to increasing their moisture and oxygen-excluding properties.—Engineering Magazine.

WEALTH OF THE UNITED STATES

By Vice President James Sherman.

We have to-day 80,000,000 of people, occupying 3,000,000 square miles of territory, and they own $120,000,000,000 of wealth. On farms valued at $25,000,000,000 we produce annually agricultural products valued at $8,000,000,000. It is nothing that we produce annually 2,500,000,000 bushels of corn and 11,000,000 bales of cotton, if there is no demand for the corn and cotton and if the demand is not at a fair return. But we have the market. Our 5,500,000 of people who produce $15,000,000,000 of manufactured products annually, and receive in wages $230,000,000, make the market. These figures apply only to finished product. We get the products to the consumer by 250,000 miles of railroad, which is three times the railroad mileage of Great Britain, France and Germany combined. When side tracks are taken into account, we have more railroad mileage than all the rest of the world. On these railroads we have 100,000 engines, carrying millions of cars and hauling 2,000,000,000 tons. of freight. This practically equals all the tonnage carried by all the railroads and all the ships of all the rest of the world. This monstrous task is performed by 5,500,000 of employes, who are yearly paid $2,300,000,000, and this vast business is conducted by $150,000,000,000 of bank clearances.

Do we prosper? Only two decades ago we were second to Great Britain in the output of iron and steel. To-day our output equals all the rest of the world. We live well and have happy homes, filled with comforts and luxuries. Yet we are a saving people.

We have in savings banks $3,500,000,000, in national banks $4,500,000,000 and in State banks $5,000,000,000—in all, $13,000,000,000. The per capita of money in the country is larger than in any other save one, France, and amounts to $35 for each of our 80,000,000 people.

The business of the country amounts to over $3,000,000,000 annually. How do we do such a monstrous business which is also profitable? It is because we have confidence in ourselves and the other nations of the globe have confidence in us.—Leslie's Weekly.

LEARNING FROM THE CHILDREN.

By Woods Hutchinson.

Treat the child more as an equal—not as a hopeless inferior. There isn't so much need of coming down to his level as of giving him ap opportunity to come up to yours—which will not require such a frightful effort on his part as you sometimes imagine. If you can get a child to recognize and treat you as his equal you will have gained the highest position of influence over him and earned the best and sincerest compliment ever paid you. We dwell greatly upon what parents teach their children, but we forget to record in equal detail on the opposite side of the ledger what our children teach us.

It would be difficult to say on which side the balance would be found to fall. The child is not merely the ideal pupil, but also the greatest teacher in the world. The lessons that we learn from him, if we approach him with proper humility, are the most valuable part of our education.—Success Magazine.

FLEET'S TRIP MONEY WASTED.

By Justice Brewer.

The assertion that the best way to preserve peace is to build up a great navy and army shows an ignorance of history. The trip of the fleet around the world, as a boastful show of our naval strength, has been nothing but a waste of money.

After all its folly, its influence on the Orient has not brought peace one day nearer. Over five millions of the people's money has been spent for coaling this fleet alone. What benefit has the nation received from that expenditure? Over 65 per cent of this country's expenses are due to the army and navy. In 1907 the sum spent in this way totaled $365,000,000—the largest sum spent by any nation.

There never has been a nation that built a great army or navy but that got into war. Peace born of force is only temporary. Not until all nations settle their differences by arbitration will the world enjoy peace.—Leslie's Weekly.

THE PASSING OF H. H. ROGERS.

Former Grocery Boy of Fairhaven, Mass., Who Became a Money King.

The death of Henry Huttleston Rogers, multi-millionaire and Standard Oil magnate, came as a shock to the men of the financial world. Mr. Rogers died of apoplexy, an ending which he had reason to anticipate, for nearly two years ago he had suffered from a stroke which compelled a temporary retirement from business activities.

Henry H. Rogers was a native of Mattapoisett, Mass., and was 60 years of age when death brought to a close his marvelous career. As a boy he attended school in Fairhaven, Mass., where his father was a grocer—a town which years afterward was the resipient of his financial favor in many ways. He began his business career selling newspapers and driving a delivery wagon for his father. Then he worked as a clerk in New Bedford for $3 a week. After five years he became a railroad brakeman and baggageman at $1.16 per day. Shortly after reaching his majority he went with his young wife to the Pennsylvania oil country, taking with him his savings of $600. There he came into contact with that group of Oil City boys many of whom later were to be numbered among the financial kings of America. In 1866, after five years in the oil fields, he went to Brooklyn as partner in the firm conducting the Charles Pratt Oil Works.

In Standard Oil.

In 1874 the union of the chief oil refiners in New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Pittsburg brought into existence the Standard Oil Company and Rogers was in on the ground floor. Second only to John D. Rockefeller, he was responsible for the remarkable success of that organization and second only to him he reaped the greatest financial reward.

Two great ideas Mr. Rogers contributed to the development of the oil business. He invented the machinery by which naphtha was first successfully separated from the crude oil, thus making the way for all that has been done since in the use of naphtha and its kindred products, and making the handling and use of the residual oil far safer than it had even been before because the volatile constituent had been removed.

Of late years Mr. Rogers, with William Rockefeller, left the matter of oil production and distribution with others, and devoted himself to the management of the many millions of dollarse which make the Standard Oil Company one of the great financial powers of the world.

Mr. Rogers' first wife was Libbie T. Quilford, of Fairhaven, Mass. She died fourteen years ago and a year later he married Emma Augusta Randall, daughter of the head of a big diamond firm, and former wife of Lucius R. Hart, whom she had divorced. His wife and four children survive him. His children are: Henry H. Rogers, Jr.; Mrs. W. Benjamin, Mrs. Urban H. Broughton and Mrs. William R. Coe. The youngest daughter, Mae, at the age of 17, eloped in 1893 with Joseph C. Mott, but her parents secured a divorce for her and later she became Mrs. Coe.

Mr. Rogers' wealth is estimated at from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000. He was exceedingly generous in his benevolences and had devoted at least $3,000,00 to making Fairhaven a city beautiful. His summer estate has long been recognized as one of the show places of America. Among his gifts to Fairhaven were a grammar school, a library, a town hall building, a Masonic building, a magnificent Unitarian church, parish house and parsonage. He also purchased a mosquito-infested swamp, filled it in, converted it into a park and gave it to the city. Chiefly at his own expense he macadamized every street in town, placed walks at all crossings, curbed all the sidewalks and paved the gutters.

Mr. Rogers was recognized as the closest friend of Samuel L. Clemons (Mark Twain), and the two were together whenever possible. Mr. Clemons was on his way to call on Mr. Rogers when he learned of his death and was so overcome that he could barely express his grief.

Henry H. Rogers was a man of striking and contradictory characteristics. He was a tremendous worker and all his life it was his habit to be up by 5:30 or 6 o'clock in the morning. He was a devoted friend to those whom he liked and an implacable enemy to those who saw fit to fight him. He was at once a man of tenderness and a man of steel. On Wall street he was adamant; at home and among his friends he was genial, warm-hearted, lovable. His intimate friends were drawn from two extremes of life. The brilliance of Mark Twain and the late Tom Reed was his delight. To them he showed a side of make-up that few others outside of his family appreciated. On the other hand, there have been for years in Fairhaven natives who would never speak to him except as "Hen." They were his intimate friends also, each in his own way, and they saw a side of the man that Wall street would find it difficult to understand.

THE LATE HENRY H. ROGERS.

She Followed Instructions.

In a certain city, which shall be nameless, a literary man had asked his wife, as she was starting down-town, to buy a pair of shirts for him. She asked him what kind, and he answered, "Size fifteen."

"Yes, but——"

"Two dollars."

"But I want to know——"

"Oh, the color? Well, I've plenty of white shirts. Get me something that won't show soot. Now don't bother me any more, please. I'm at work."

She did not bother him any more. She went away, and in the afternoon returned with her purchases.

"Here are your shirts, John," she said, laying them down before him.

"Why, they're coal-black, Lucinda!" he exclaimed.

"Yes, that's the only kind that won't show soot. They are just what you told me to buy. Now don't bother me by talking about them. I have got to go and look after the children."

Being "game," John took his medicine without protest.

Foods for the Gouty.

Dr. Haig, of London, who has attained eminence in the treatment of certain diseases, came to his theory of the uric-acid causation of many cases of so-called neuralgia, rheumatic pains, gouty twinges and headache as a result of observation on himself. During his student and early professional days he suffered horribly from periodical headaches, losing an average of one or two days out of every week in consequence thereof. He experimented with all sorts of drugs and modes of living, and finally discovered that the less meat he ate the less headache he had, and he found further that the occurrence of headache was marked by a simultaneous excretion of a large amount of uric acid.

From these two facts he concluded that the headache was due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, and that the presence of uric acid in the blood was due to meat-eating. From this beginning was developed a complete system of dietetics, having for its object the exclusion of all uric-acid-containing foods, since, if uric acid is really the cause of these troubles, no permanent relief can be expected so long as fresh quantities of the offending poison are thrown into the system every day.

Man is naturally a fruit-and-vegetable-eating animal, he believes, and must return to his original diet as the only means to his sanitary salvation. In other words, Dr. Haig is a vegetarian, but a peculiar kind of one, for he does not allow all vegetable foods by any means.

Beans, peas and other pulses are forbidden, since their protein is readily convertible into uric acid, and especially does he eschew tea and coffee, their alkaloidal ingredient, caffeine, being practically the same chemically as uric acid.

The diet of one who would avoid becoming a subject of the uric-acid diathesis, or who would emancipate himself from the pains of the already existing condition, must therefore consist almost entirely of breadstuff and cereals, puddings, fresh and dried fruits, nuts and the milk products. Water is the only beverage allowed. It is a meager diet, and must be more or less monotonous; and moreover, it is not always efficacious in curing periodical headaches and other supposed manifestations of the uric-acid diathesis. An occasional course of it, and a habitual more or less close approach to it are, no doubt, of great benefit to the general health, but one must not forget that many of the ills credited to uric acid may be a direct result of eyestrain, to be relieved more by glasses than by diet.

At what age does the devil develop in a boy? We saw a 4-year-old boy spitting on another boy's shoes this morning, because they had just been shined.

The explanations you make for your actions are usually laughed at by people when your back is turned.

One way to get thin is to do all your own cooking in a chafing dish.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Pressed Mock Chicken.

Boil a piece of fresh shoulder of pork until tender, adding pepper and salt to the water in which it is cooked. When done, run the meat through the meat chopper, and return to the liquor in which it was boiled in the kettle. Add enough boiled oats to absorb or thicken the liquid, season to suit the taste, and simmer from twenty to thirty minutes, then pack into a bowl or crock. When cold it is nice to spread on sandwiches. It is also good cut into squares, dipped into flour and fried for tea or luncheon.

Kentucky Corn Dodgers.

Sift any quantity desired of the best meal made from the white corn. Salt to taste. Mix with cold water into stiff dough and form into round long dodgers with the hands, making the dodgers about 4 or 5 inches long and 1½ inches in diameter. Have a griddle hot, grease a little with lard, and put the dodgers on as you roll them. Put in the oven and bake thoroughly, when they will be crisp and a rich brown. This bread does not rise.

Mackerel Balls.

Soak a mackerel over night; boil four large potatoes in their skins. When these are done peel, mash soft, add salt and pepper to taste, beat one egg and add it, with butter, to the potatoes while hot. Bone the mackerel and flake it fine, add the potatoes, mix well together, run through your potato masher again, then make into little balls, put into a greased pan and bake in a hot oven until brown.

Crustless Pumpkin Pie.

This will be a relief to some of our cooks who do not like to make pie crust. Make the filling of the pie as usual, adding a little cornstarch, so that it will be firm when baked. Cover the inside of a rather deep pie plate with a rather thick coating of butter, then sprinkle with flour, either white or entire wheat, until the butter is entirely covered. Pour in the filling and bake as usual. It will be found very delicate and nice.

Stewed Oyster Plant.

Scrape the stalks of a bunch of salsify plant and cut each stalk into half-inch lengths, dropping it into cold water as you do so. Drain and boil in hot salted water until tender. Drain again and pour into the saucepan with the vegetable a generous cup of milk that has been thickened with a little butter and flour rubbed to a paste. Season with salt and pepper to taste, stir until hot and serve.

Cream Salad Dressing.

Put into a saucepan the beaten yolks of two eggs a tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-third of a cup of milk, pepper to taste, one-third teaspoonful of dry mustard, and one-third cup of vinegar. Boil, stirring steadily, until as thick as rich cream. Serve very cold.

Glass Stoppers That Stick.

To remove an obstinate glass stopper which not only resists force, but the usually prescribed hot cloths and everything else which ingenuity could devise, use a drop of sweet oil. Put it on the rim of the bottle, where it will settle around the stopper. In ten minutes the top lifts out.

Salmon Loaf.

One cup boiled salmon, minced; one cup stale bread crumbs, two eggs well beaten, one-half cup milk. Season with salt and pepper, one teaspoon each of lemon juice and chopped parsley. Pour in buttered mold, steam half hour. Pour on hot dish and serve with white sauce.

Eggless Cookies.

Mix together a half-cup of butter and a half-cup of lard, add a cup of sugar and work to a cream, then stir in a cup of milk and enough flour, sifted, with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, to make a dough that can be rolled out. Roll, cut into rounds and bake.

Pumpkin Bread Again.

Stew a pumpkin as for pies and, while bubbling hot, stir in enough corn meal to make it thick, or like a dough. Before adding the meal salt it and be sure it is well scalded before taking the mixture from the fire. Sweeten to taste and bake in a thin sheet. Eat hot with butter.

Clear Sauce.

One cup brown sugar, one-half cup boiling water, thickened with one teaspoonful cornstarch; boil until thick. Flavor as liked.

Short Suggestions.

A weak solution of salt and water will brighten mattings.

Sponges are great germ collectors. They should be scalded out thoroughly every little while.

Kid slippers, belts, gloves and purses are best cleansed by rubbing them with French chalk.

Never forget to dust over the door and window frames when giving a room its thorough weekly cleaning.

Use half-rye and half-wheat bread; rub over rug the same as scrubbing, and when through sweep thoroughly. The rug will be like new.

A heavy broom lasts longest, but a light one is best for easy work, and with care a light broom will last almost as long as a more expensive one.

A box of sardines and a can of shrimp, both prepared for eating and served together on lettuce leaves with a dressing of oil, vinegar, onion juice, salt and pepper, make a delicious salad. Mayonnaise dressing may be used.

When scraping new potatoes they will invariably blacken the hands. There is nothing better than a piece of lemon for removing the blemish, and when obstinate, if a pinch of powdered pumice is placed on the lemon, it will instantly remove the stain.

Kidney Ailment

I want every person who suffers with any form of Kidney ailment, no matter how many remedies they have tried, no matter how many doctors they have consulted, no matter how serious the case, to give Munyon's Kidney Remedy a trial. You will be astonished to see how quickly it relieves all pains in the back loins and groins caused by the kidneys. You will be surprised to see how quickly it reduces the swelling in the feet and legs, also puffiness under the eyes, after taking a few doses of this remedy. You will be delighted to see the color returning to your cheeks and feel the thrill of vigor and good cheer. If your Urine is thick or milky, if it is pale and foamy, if it contains sediments or brickdust, if it is highly colored or has an offensive smell, if you urinate frequently, you should persist in taking this remedy until all symptoms disappear. We believe this remedy has cured more serious kidney ailments than all the Kidney medicines that have been compounded. Professor Munyon believes that the terrible death rate from Bright's Disease and Diabetes is unnecessary and will be greatly reduced by this remedy.

Go at once to your druggist and purchase a bottle of Munyon's Kidney remedy. If it fails to give satisfaction I will refund your money.—Munyon.

In the Sawmill District.

The city of Hoquiam, Wash., with a population of 6,000, has, it is believed, a larger proportion of crippled, maimed and scarred people than any other town of like size in the world. There are 500 men who have either lost a leg, arm, hand, foot, finger, toe or ear. There are many more who will carry to the grave ugly scars.

None of the men has ever been in an Indian fight, nor have any participated in battles. They are loggers and sawmill men who have met with accidents in one of the most dangerous occupations. Not a day passes in the sawmill district of the State of Washington but that some one is killed or injured.

The Hoquiam city officials recently took a census and the tabulations now on the file with the town clerk showed or injured.

Sixty-five men with one leg each, 5 legless men, 2 men have lost both legs and one hand, 23 men have no feet, 3 handless men, 4 men who have one leg each, 1 man lost nose and ears, 11 men have but one eye each, 2 men have been scalped, 150 men have scars on faces, 100 men who have other injuries that have maimed them for life.

BURDENS LIFTED FROM BENT BACKS.

A bad back is a heavy handicap to those of us who work every day. Nine times out of ten, it is due to sick kidneys. The only way to find relief is to cure the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills have given sound, strong backs to thousands of men and women.

Mrs. L. Spicer, 304 S. Seventh St., De Kalb, Ill., says. "There was a severe dull pain in the right side and back that troubled me a great deal and I had frequent headaches and dizzy spells. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me at once, however, and have made me better in every way."

SKIN WAS ROUGH AS BARK.

Baby Boy Had an Intense Itching Humor—Scratched Till Blood Ran—Found a Cure in Cuticura.

"Our son, two years old, was afflicted with a rash. After he suffered with the trouble several weeks I took him to the doctor, but it got worse. The rash ran together and made large blisters. The little fellow didn't want to do anything but scratch and we had to wrap his hands up to keep him from tearing the flesh open till the blood would run. The itching was intense. The skin on his back became hard and rough like the bark of a tree. He suffered intensely for about three months. But I found a remedy in Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. The result was almost magical. That was more than two years ago, and there has not been the slightest symptom of it since he was cured. J. W. Lauck, Yukon, Okla., Aug. 28 and Sept. 17, 1908."

A Thoughtful Hen.

As a subject of incredible tales, the hen is second only to the fish. The latest one comes from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and concerns itself with the wandering fowl. This hen had set out to see the world, and on her way met a crow in a distant wood.

"Hello!" said the crow. "Are you not afraid, without wings, of losing your way in all the tangle?"

"Afraid? Not I!" scoffed the hen, courageously. "Every little while I lay an egg to guide myself back by."

A MARRIAGE IN GREENLAND.

Trouble Occurs When Man Seizes the Girl He Wants for Wife.

The courtship and marriage customs among the Greenlanders were, in early times, simple and unceremonious enough, since we are told that when a lovelorn youth made up his mind as to the girl he wanted to adorn and be useful in his hut of ice or snow, he went to her home, seized her by the hair or wherever he could secure a good grip on her, and dragged her to his own domain, where she was expected to "stay put" without any further marriage ceremony, says Leslie's Weekly. If an affluent bridegroom, he would perhaps soothe her lacerated feelings by presenting her with a new lamp or some other article of household utility. No matter how willing and even eager the bride was to marry a young man, Eskimo etiquette demanded that she would resist every attempt to drag her to her new home, and she must weep and wail bitterly once she was there. Indeed, she must continue to weep and wail for some days, and even run away to her own home, only to be dragged back again. It is said that this extremely simple marriage ceremony is the only one still in use on the east coast of Greenland, and the laws governing divorce have as little "red tape" connected with them as have the laws of marriage. But it is maintained that, as a rule, married couples live on quite amiable terms, for the Eskimo are not fond of quarreling and they like peace in the house and with their fellowmen. One rarely hears quarreling and wrangling in an Eskimo home, and no class of people are fonder of their children than are Eskimo fathers and mothers. Not even the unwelcome girls are treated harshly, and as for the boys, they may do about as they will. Although they are given this large liberty, they are often less "forth-putting" than are many of our American children.

MAKING SUNSHINE.

It Is Often Found in Pure Food.

The improper selection of food drives many a healthy person into the depths of despairing illness. Indeed, most sickness comes from wrong food and just so surely as that is the case right food will make the sun shine once more.

An old veteran of Newburyport, Mass., says: "In October, I was taken sick and went to bed, losing 47 pounds in about 60 days. I had doctor after doctor, food hurt me and I had to live almost entirely on magnesia and soda. All solid food distressed me so that water would run out of my mouth in little streams.

"I had terrible night sweats and my doctor finally said I had consumption and must die. My good wife gave up all hope. We were at Old Orchard, Me., at that time and my wife saw Grape-Nuts in a grocery there. She bought some and persuaded me to try it.

"I had no faith in it but took it to please her. To my surprise it did not distress me as all other food had done and before I had taken the fifth package I was well on the mend. The pains left my head, my mind became clearer and I gained weight rapidly.

"I went back to my work again and now after six weeks' use of the food I am better and stronger than ever before in my life. Grape-Nuts surely saved my life and made me a strong hearty man, 15 pounds heavier than before I was taken sick.

"Both my good wife and I are willing to make affidavit to the truth of this."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Danbroock Powell, 85 years old, a pioneer of Madison county, died recently at the home of his daughter-in-law, Mrs. D. D. Powell, in North Anderson.

After Marion, the 17-year-old son of William Struble, of Elkhart had sunk out of sight in St. Joseph river, the floating end of a fishing pole whose line had become wrapped around the body, indicated the whereabouts and he was pulled up by George Vanfleet and Thomas Wilkinson, who had come to his aid in a boat. He was resuscitated with difficulty.

Lloyd Anderson, six years old, was found dead, at the home of his foster parents, on a farm near Marion. His head was held fast by the weight of a sliding door and indications are that the boy struggled to free himself until he died of strangualtion. Two years ago he was kicked by a horse and recovered in spite of the fact that physicians said he could not live.

War on Carlisle druggists for alleged illegal sale of liquor will be commenced during the present term of the circuit court. Ike Durrett and Curtner Brothers, of Carlisle, are under indictment. The Anti-Saloon League has made a request that local authorities look into the alleged illegal sale of cigarettes. Prosecutor Walter F. Wood will probably hold a court of inquiry.

William Hall, of Evansville, a negro, caught a gang of white boys drinking beer recently and asked them for some. When they refused he pulled his gun and shot into the crowd, wounding Eurie Peck in the leg and the latter's brother, Annis Peck, in the shoulder. The boys seized the negro and would have lynched him had not officers rescued Hall. He was arrested.

In filing an affidavit in the court of Justice Kinney, of Columbus, against James Spencer, charging petit larceny, William Jones explained to the court that it did not pay in the long run to be too flush with money. He said he was displaying a handful of money, when Spencer grabbed $1 from him and ran. He was afterward unable to recover the dollar, he said, so decided to charge the man with stealing.

It is believed Robert Greene, the "banker horsethief," who escaped from the State prison recently, is in hiding near Valparaiso. A posse of citizens and officials is searching for him. He escaped from prison after being made a "trusty," and stole a horse and buggy, later, near Westville, but the outfit was recovered by Sheriff Johnson, of Porter county. Greene escaped but the sheriff believes he wounded him.

A cleverly laid plan by Peter Sobesky, of Laporte, under arrest on a charge of robbery, to murder Sheriff Wm. Anstiss and escape, was frustrated through a tip received by the sheriff from another prisoner, just after the officer had been called into the jail by Sobesky. In Sobesky's cell, carefully hidden, were found several iron bars, a saw, two knives and a pair of shears. How he secured these articles is a mystery.

E. S. Ricketts, of Terre Haute, while spading in his garden, dug up a tomato can containing a roll of currency. From appearances the bundle had been buried several years, and it was in such a condition that it could not be examined. Mr. Ricketts has turned it over to a bank for examination. The discovery has revived old stories concerning a miser who lived there about twenty years ago. It is also said that the house was at one time occupied by two men who were suspected of receiving stolen goods.

Merrit Toogins is dead at his home near Correct, as a result of being shot last April while at work in Tennessee. Mr. Toogins at the time, with a partner, was operating a phosphate fertilizing plant which was on the land of a relative of the partner. After some disagreement the relative ordered the men off the land, the shooting resulting. Mr. Toogins was paralyzed by the bullet. Although he underwent an operation he gradually grew worse. He is survived by a widow and several children.

If the advice of A. E. Peffley, of Churubusco, is followed, Cass county will become noted for more than its politicians, its Democratic majorities and its "wetness." It will be noted for its onions. Peffley known around Churubusco as the onion king, has been in Logansport for the past week and he has made an examination of Cass county soil. He says he has found much land which should yield anywhere from 600 to 1,000 bushels of silver skin onions an acre. He is enthusiastic and wishes Cass county farmers to go into the onion raising business on a large scale. He sees a fortune for them and will be back soon and talk onions to every one who will listen.

James Hayden, Known over Union county as "Fiddler Jim" committed suicide by hanging himself at the infirmary in Brownsville. He used his shirt as a rope and tied it to a piece of timber.

Alfred Guthrie, one of the wealthiest men of Lawrence county, and president of the Stone City bank, in Bedford, has divided one-half of $160,000 among his seven children. He is one of the largest land owners in the county.

William McGlone, on trial the second time at Terre Haute, on a charge of stealing two turkeys, was convicted by a jury, fined $25 and sentenced to ninety days in jail. The county was put to an expense of $900 in convicting him.

Mrs. Sarah Smalley, wife of Andrew J. Smalley, a well-known former near Summitville, was adjudged insane and taken to the Madison county jail. She wil be sent to a hospital later. Her husband says she became deranged over the Madison county local option campaign.

As F. J. Rump, a Fort Wayne contractor, was driving on Fairfield avenue recently his auto struck Elva Woods, a milkman, and knocked him 40 feet. Woods' legs were broken and he was injured internally, but he may recover.

Henry Hall, of Evansville, was heavily fined in Police Court recently for striking his father-in-law, James Sartin, an old soldier, with a club and breaking his arm. A year ago the arm was broken in the same place by another son-in-law, who struck the old man with a club.

Miss Leona Pearl Acton, a Bluffton blind girl, will soon be graduated from the State Institution for the Blind. Until two years ago, from the time she was 6 years old, her education was provided by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First M. E. church at Bluffton.

A family reunion out of the ordinary was held near Greenfield, when the twelve children of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Shelby assembled at the family dinner. Thee remarkable feature of the reunion is the fact that in the fifty-five years the Shelbys have been married death has never visited their home.

Alfred Bordaman, of Marion, 41 years old, while engaged in pulling drive pipe from an abandoned oil well, three miles southeast of Van Buren, was instantly killed, by being struck in the head by a flying pulley which broke from its fastenings. The top of his skull was torn away. Bordaman is survived by a widow and four children.

"Uncle" William Kelso, of Petersburg, aged 80 years, the biggest man in Pike County, died recently. He could easily shoulder a two-bushel sack of wheat with one hand and carry a sack on each shoulder, until a few years ago. He was the strongest man of his time there and during his life, through hard labor, amassed a small fortune.

J. F. Stensil, aged 60 years, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., killed himself in the St. George Hotel at Evansville. He took both phenol and laudanum, and, to make death certain, shot himself in the temple. He conducted a hotel at Mt. Carmel, Ill., where he leaves a widow and one daughter. He was formerly a railroad conductor and belonged to the Conductors' Union and Eagles.

George I. Winans, of Shelbyville, recently bought a number of chickens from Ben Kokentied, who lives in Flatrock, Shelby County. Thomas J. Noblitt purchased two of the chickens from Kokentied. When one of the chickens was cleaned a nugget of pure gold was found in its craw. It is thought the hen picked up the gold where more of the precious metal can be found, and the feeding place of these chickens will be closely watched.

William Jennings Bryan refused to give the Ladies' Aid Society of the Ripple M. E. church, in Shelby Township, near Shelbyville, 10 cents for their festival held the latter part of the week. In a kind letter he said he was called on so much for small donations that he had to refuse them all. The women had a silk quilt with 1,026 names on it, and it was sold to Perry Amos for $17. The names of many prominent men were on it, each person whose name was on the quilt paying 10 cents. The society received $119.60 for the quilt.

That an old hen will put up a strong fight in defense of her little chicks was shown at the home of D. E. Ellerton, south of Owensville, when a large chicken snake moved noiselessly to a point where the hen was standing with her chicks nestled closely about her. The hen was on the defensive before the reptile was aware of it. Clucking at her chicks two or three times, the mother waited for the snake to make the first pass. The reptile advanced a little farther and quick as a flash the hen sprang at the enemy in a manner that made the snake crawl for the tall grass. The hen continued the onslaught and the snake was driven out of the yard before the old hen returned to her chicks that were chirping with all their might as if applauding their mother's bravery.

The City Council of Ligonier has granted the Ligonier School Board the square opposite the Carnegie library for the purpose of erecting the proposed High School building. Work will commence on the building at once.

Joseph Cooprider, of Clay City, picked up in the bed of a small water course a formation which all who have seen it believe is a petrified human foot. In outline the object resembles a foot, although the toes are missing.

A Clay county farmer reports that a few days ago two crows made an assault on a brood of month old chicks, but the mother at once attacked the crows and at times both crows were on the hen's back. The mother hen won the battle.

F. Bushberry, a member of the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus band, was converted by the Salvation Army while in South Bend. He has left the show and will remain in South Bend where he will follow his vocation as a painter and paperhanger and assist the army in its work.

Redeeming a Neglected Garden.

Discouraging as a neglected garden may appear, it is not beyond redemption, even so late in the season—but it must be taken hold of at once. Stunted and failing crops, choked by weeds, should be pulled out at once, weeds and all, and burned, and the ground plowed or spaded, and replanted.

How much more satisfactory and profitable it might have been to have planted only half the space, and worked it well, than to have scattered the available labor over the entire ground and do nothing to perfection.

A garden with rows upon rows of all the delicious vegetables of midsummer and not a weed to be found, is indeed a pleasant picture. But how few of that class are found! Instead of choice vegetables there are rank weeds, and where order and beauty should reign, desolation stares at one in too many family gardens, caused in the majority of cases by simply "biting off more than we can chaw."

Sulphur Fumigation.

It takes some ingenuity to burn sulphur in a vessel, as it tends to smother flames. If several pounds are to be burned, a fire of cobs or sticks soaked with kerosene must be built above the sulphur and kept burning until you see the blue flame of the sulphur licking up through the wood blaze.

One way to disinfect the poultry house with sulphur is to dissolve one-half pint of turpentine and one-half pint of tar in one-half gallon of kerosene. Soak corncobs in this solution, and when ready to burn out the poultry house for lice or germs of disease have ready a sharp-pointed piece of iron to thrust in the ends of the cobs, set a lighted match to it and while it burns pass the cob over the roosts, cracks in the henhouse and everywhere about it. This should be done every week for a month or more.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Middlemen.

Retailers are necessary according to present methods of doing business and until farmers organize a selling force of their own middlemen will continue to toll the farmers' grist as thoroughly as the traffic will bear. Peaches may rot on the ground in Missouri while selling for 2 cents each in Chicago, but the farmer in Missouri is helpless because he has no representative in the market center. The time will come when farmers will have an agent at each central point to handle farm products and distribute them either to the consumer or retail grocer. When that time comes farmers will come nearer getting what they work for. It is just as necessary to sell right as to farm right.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Passing of Horned Cattle.

Horned cattle and horned sheep are rapidly disappearing. Many of the cattle bred and fed in the corn belt are hornless. Breeds of this kind are growing in popularity. In the mountainous country and on the plains wild cattle needed long horns for the protection of themselves and their young. Now, however, with the plains thickly settled and with few wild animals the cattle do not need horns. Among the hornless breeds are the Galloway, Angus, Red Poll and Polled Shorthorns, Polled Jersey and Polled Hereford are also coming into favor. By the application of caustic potash the growth of the horns is prevented in the young calf.—Inter Ocean.

System of Ventilation.

Details of the King system of ventilation are shown in the diagram. The outside of board wall is indicated by A and the opening for admission of air is at C. On the right there is shown a cross section of wall with outside opening at D and inside opening at E. A valve is arranged at E to regulate the supply of fresh air.

The Work Horse.

Oil meal or ground flaxseed is a good remedy and preventive for constipation.

In training a colt teach him one thing at a time and do that thoroughly.

When horses have free access to salt at all times, they are not so apt to suffer from worms.

If the horse's shoulders are clean the collar will not be much dirty.

Feeding a horse corn one day, oats the next and something else the next, is a good way to quickly invite indigestion.

Pest Becomes Industry.

Australia's rabbit pest has become a commercial industry in the State of Victoria. During the past five years 41,423,000 frozen rabbits were exported from Victoria, principally to England; also 98,242,000 rabbit skins. Rabbit skin exports to the United States rose from a value of $2,754 in 1904 to $243,382 in 1908.

The Feed of Colts and Calves.

It is a mistake to allow the colts and calves to go onto pasture skin pure. Keep them in good flesh with hay and grain foods. Corn and clover hay are about the best feeds for these young animals, and they will eat them all the year round. Dry clover hay is relished by all cattle and horses even when on good summer pasture, and it is a good thing to give them a daily feed of it.

Cows Giving Down Milk.

John Burrows, the well-known scientist, in regard to cows giving down their milk says: Many persons think that giving down or holding up the milk by the cow is a voluntary act. In fact, they fancy the udder as a vessel filled with milk, and that the cow releases or withholds it just as she chooses. But the udder is a manufactory; it is filled with blood, from which the milk is manufactured while you milk. This process is controlled by the cow's nervous system. When she is excited or in any way disturbed, as by strangers or by taking away her calf or any other cause, the process is arrested and the milk will not flow. The nervous energy goes elsewhere. The whole process is as involuntary as is digestion in man and is disturbed or arrested in about the same way.

Cheap Corn Cultivator.

An excellent home-made device for use in cultivating corn and other crops where frequent work is desired to hold the dust mulch is shown in the cut. The side pieces should be at least

A HOME-MADE CULTIVATOR.

5 feet long and made of oak or other hard wood 3 inches wide and 1½ inches thick. The rear pieces can be made of any width to accommodate the distance between the rows. The teeth are made of forty 60-d spikes, which are driven in clear up to the head. An iron ring is fastened to the front end, while the handles are taken from an old plow. Any handy man can make a cultivator of this kind which is the best I ever used.—F. B. Treadway, in Farm and Home.

Waste of Timber.

The prodigal waste of timber during the last forty years is estimated to average 750,000,000 annually, or approximately $2,000,000,000 worth of timber wasted. It is time there was a national movement to conserve our national resources and arrest the prodigal waste of our forests and the depletion of the fertility of the land. While Uncle Sam is no longer rich enough to give everybody a farm, there is plenty of agricultural land to support a population of 300,000,000 in the United States, Texas alone being capable of maintaining 80,000,000 people if all her arable land were under cultivation to cereals, fruits and vegetables—Farmer's and Drover's Journal.

To Destroy Plant Lice.

One of the best methods of destroying plant lice on roses and shrubs is by the use of tobacco stem solution. Pour a gallon of boiling water on a pound of tobacco stems, and about twelve or fifteen hours later add four more gallons of water. Apply with a sprayer or sprinkling pot.

The Busy Bee.

Three hundred billion bees made enough honey last year to fill a train of cars long enough to reach from New York to Buffalo. At the low wholesale rate of 10 cents a pound, it was worth $25,000,000.

Farm Gleanings.

Provide ample pasture for the calves.

Overcrowding of the chickens is a strong bid for trouble.

Fit yourself to the weather. Don't get all out of kink because the weather is.

The work of raising chickens has only begun when you get the downy things out of the shell.

It is claimed that an orchard in the State of Delaware has an annual income of $16,000 from 200 acres of apple trees.

Have a driveway right through your barn. It will prove valuable in many ways, especially in the matter of keeping it clean.

Nothing better for growing swine than good pasturage, and there is no more economical method of raising them, either.

The Connecticuit Experiment Station recommends that for the best results in hatching, eggs not over five days old be used.

Poultry and dairy products have almost doubled in price in the past ten years. Eggs and milk are still rising in average price.

Dip the sheep right after clipping them and then again about ten days after to be sure and kill those that hatch after the first dipping.

An excellent feed for all kinds of young stock is fine cut clover hay, cooked and steeped in boiling water and mixed with salt, bran and corn meal.

To have finely colored fruit it is necessary to have plenty of light. A dressing of wood ashes, or potash, around the base of the tree, will also help considerably to improve the color.

Oklahoma is the only state which requires the teaching of agriculture in all country schools. The courses include agriculture, horticulture, stock raising, fertilizers, dairying, drainage, irrigation and mining.

Soldiers' Pensions

The question is frequently asked why the pension list of Civil war veterans grows so rapidly when the number of old soldiers is being constantly decreased by death. The further we get from the war the greater the number of pensioners. Major George Breck gives in the New York Sun a very simple and convincing answer to the question as follows:

"The thousands of new names admitted to the list can be attributed to the fact that they did not avail themselves of the pension service until or during the year, 1908." Not having arrived at the age of sixty-two, they were not entitled to pension under the age law.

The Civil war ended forty-four years ago. Of the 2,778,300 enlistments in the Union army, 2,160,000 in round numbers were made under the age of twenty-one, and only 618,000 over that age. The northern armies were composed largely of boys, of whom there were nearly a million under sixteen, and more than a million under eighteen Major Breck says there were twenty-five soldiers under ten years; 225 under twelve and 1,523 under fourteen years of age.

Then men who in their teens fought the battles of the nation should be treated with both justice and generosity, no matter how late their application for aid may come.

Large ears are a sign of benevolence—on the part of nature.

The report that Jacob Cook is getting his milk from the creamery is a mistake. Mr. Cook has his own cows and secures the milk for his patrons from that source.

WELL DRESSED MEN
appreciate the efforts of the tailor to give them good style and well wearing clothes at a cost that is not prohibitive. It is only the FIRST cost that make custom made clothes seem expensive.
THE LENGTH OF TIME
that they wear and keep their appearance is far longer than the ordinary store clothing, and proper care in pressing and hanging makes them last much longer. Try our tailor shop for your next suit or overcoat.

Pressing Down Pains
are a sign of serious female complaint, that should have immediate attention.
If you begin in time, you can generally treat yourself at home, without the need of consulting a physician, by the regular use of Cardui, the well-known remedy for women's ills.
Composed of purely vegetable and perfectly harmless medicinal ingredients, being, besides, a gentle, non-intoxicating, strengthening tonic,
WINE OF CARDUI
WOMAN'S RELIEF
relieves all female complaints. "My wife," writes John A. Rodgers, of Hampden Sidney, Va., "was nothing but a walking skeleton, from female trouble. She suffered agonies with bearing-down pains, backache and headache. Doctors failed to relieve her, so she took Cardui, and is now entirely cured."

A Checking Account With a Bank

is a great convenience. The business man can not do without it. The professional man will not do without it. The farmer should not do without it. More people would keep such accounts if they knew just how to go about it. We gladly assist those who need help in getting started.

Bank your money as fast as you get it. Pay by check. You will be at a great disadvantage unless you do business as the rest of the world does it. Ninety per cent. of the business in the United States is done with bank checks.

Your checks become as good as bank notes; your balance at the bank will keep growing; your credit will become firmly established—and you will soon have the working capital that makes money multiply.

A Certificate of Deposit Account

is what we call more of a savings account. If you want to use your money put it in the bank and keep a checking account with the bank. However, if you want a savings account, i. e., you have some money you are not going to use, put it in the bank on a certificate of deposit and we pay you 3 per cent. interest on the same if left six months.

We will be glad to have your name on our books either with a checking account or a certificate of deposit.

No account too small to be appreciated and receive our best attention.

Have your sale notes made payable at the First National Bank and we will collect them for you. We solicit your acquaintance and will be glad to serve you.

We have a few souvenirs on hand. If you did not get any please call and ask for one.

Paint is to a Building

what clothing is to the body. It is just as important. You should take as much care in selecting the paint to clothe your property, as you do in selecting the material to clothe your person. Paint preserves the building. Paint gives beauty to the building. In painting the labor costs more than the paint. There will be a large waste if the right paint is not used.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINT

is made for painting buildings. It is not a low-priced paint, but it is cheap because the best. It is made of the purest materials—that wear the longest. The colors are bright and handsome.

Gunsenhouser Reunion

The Gunsenhouser reunion met at the beautiful home of J. W. Brown, June 12, 1909. At 10:30 the relatives, about one hundred, were all present. A canvas had been hoisted with tables and seats and the veranda was beautifully decorated with flags, evergreen and pictures from which the program was given.

The first in order was dinner, and the tables were spread with good things of the land and it would be useless to say that all fared sumptuously.

At 1:30, the president called the friends to order and a fine program was given. All joined heartily in the song service. The program was given in full.

ACCIDENT OR SUICIDE? BULLET ENDS HIS LIFE

Robert Hodge, the twelve year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hodge who live south of the Bonny Dell school house in Franklin township, is dead. The cause of the boy's death was a bullet from a 22 caliber Stevens rifle. The scene of the accident or suicide was in the dining room of the family home. Time of shooting about 5 p. m., Wednesday.

Mrs. Hodge and her son were working in the garden when the mother asked her son to go into the house and bring back some article. The boy went into the dwelling, but remained so long that Mrs. Hodge became alarmed and went in search of him. Entering the dining room she was horrified upon discovering what she supposed was the lifeless body of her son

She immediately alarmed the neighbors and Drs. Acker & Kramer were hastily summoned. Upon arriving at the scene the physicians found that the lad was still alive, but there were no hopes of his recovery. A bullet hole through the center of his forehead points to the theory of suicide, as the rifle must have been held very close as the skin was badly burned by the powder.

The boy was in good health, enjoyed the pleasure of a first-class home and no one can conjecture why he was driven to such a rash deed. Death occurred at 5 p. m., Wednesday, the lad never having regained consciousness. The parents are almost crazed with grief, and the sympathy of everyone is extended in this sad hour of bereavement.

As we go to press (Thursday) no arrangements have been made for the funeral.

Blood Feud in Mississippi.

Two men are dead, two were perhaps fatally wounded and three others slightly injured due to a bloody street battle at Meadville, Miss., waged by parties to a bitter feud that had been previously marked with tragedy. As a result of the affair feeling runs high and State troops were rushed to Meadville from Brookhaven to guard against the possibility of rioting. Those killed were Dr. A. M. Newman, clerk of the chancery court of Franklin County, and Silas G. Reynolds. Dr. Lenox Newman, a son of one of the slain men, is believed to have been fatally injured and Herbert Applewhite, an attorney, may not recover as the result of his wounds.

Wins and Weds Her in an Hour.

J. G. Stroud, a millionaire lumberman of Williston, N. D., and Miss Mabel Leverence were married at Waukesha, Wis., after an acquaintance of an hour. Mr. Stroud mourned the fact that North Dakota was shy on handsome women. A friend who had formerly visited in Waukesha gave him Miss Leverence's address. He wrote one letter, received one in reply, took the first train, and within an hour after his arrival in Waukesha was married. Miss Leverence is 19 years old and has spent her entire life in that city.

A passenger train was left stranded near Arno with the track impassable on either side.

Postal authorities and local detectives are at work on the case.

FIND BLACK HAND LAIR; GANG IS RUN TO EARTH

Postoffice Inspectors Discover Band Whose Operations Extend Over State of Ohio.

BOMB HAD NOTE PINNED TO IT

Arrests Made of Men Said to Be Chiefs of Italian Blackmailing Organization.

In several arrests made in Columbus, Marion and Dennison, Ohio, Tuesday federal inspectors and detectives who worked in conjunction with them in the case believe that as a result of months of effort they have unearthed the biggest and best organized branch of the Black Hand in this country, Marion, Ohio, being probably the head of the organization. Chief Postoffice Inspector Charles Holmes of Cincinnati is authority for the statement that evidence has been secured showing that the gang operating from Marion and with lines reaching into a number of big cities of the country, has fleeced different persons in that and other States out of thousands of dollars in the last few months by the application of Black Hand methods.

The men arrested were Sam Lima and Joe Rizzo, at Marion; Antonio Vicario, at Columbus, and A. Marfis, at Dennison. Lima is said to be the chief of the band. Inspector Holmes said he was expecting word from Bellefontaine, Ohio, of two more arrests, and these, he said, would be of vital importance in connection with those already made.

Divide Big Booty.

Inspector Holmes says that the gang which conducted its operations from Marion was composed of Italians and worked exclusively upon their countrymen. He has obtained evidence that as late as two weeks ago they sent from the Marion post office money orders aggregating $1,900 to confederates in Italy, this being the division of blackmail funds in one case. Many such bits of evidence, it is claimed, are in possession of the inspectors.

Among those who refused demands for money were John and Charles Amicon, Columbus commission merchants. The sum of $10,000 was sought from each. In January Mrs. John Amicon found, in the rear of the house, a dynamite bomb and fuse, wrapped with one of the letters demanding payment from her husband. Several Columbus Italians are believed to have paid $1,000 each. Two Italian murders in Marion are generally charged to the gang, but there has been no proof. The gang also is charged with assassinations in Bellefontaine and Dennison.

Followed to Italy.

After demands for money had been ignored an attempt was made in April, 1908, to blow up the some of Agostino Gennarino, Columbus. Gennarino fled to Italy and did not return until a month ago. While in Italy he received a letter, mailed in Italy, renewing the demand, with a threat that there was no escape in returning to his old home.

Black Hand letters in the hands of the officials, written to Italians in Columbus, Cincinnati and other cities, are all said to be written by the same person, in Italian, with the same ink and on the same kind of paper. In the raid at Marion, ink and paper were captured which is identical with that used in making the demands.

Most of the letters received in Columbus and other Ohio cities were mailed in Pittsburg, where the money was to be paid. It is believed that they were written in Marion and passed through the hands of several messengers in different cities before being mailed.

TAFT CUTS ARMY'S COST.

On Orders of President Estimates Are Reduced $22,000,000.

Following the dictum of President Taft that the War Department estimates to be submitted to Congress for the fiscal year 1911 be cut to $20,000,000 below the appropriations for the fiscal year 1910, the officials have brought them down to nearly $22,000,000 below the appropriations for 1910. They are now to be taken in hand by Secretary Dickinson for final revision and the possibility is the figures may be increased somewhat before he finishes with them. Officials regret that the great cut in appropriations will mean the elimination of practically all construction work during the fiscal year 1911, except such as is under contract.

MARY AGNES RUIZ A SUICIDE.

Death of Woman Mentioned in Vanderbilt Case Kept a Secret.

It has been learned positively that Mrs. Mary Agnes Ruiz, whose name was mentioned in connection with the divorce case of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, killed herself in her room in Geovneror street, Mayfair, London, May 16 last. There was an inquest May 19, but no mention of it reached the public. Investigations are in progress which tend to show that local news agency reporters, whose duty it was to report the inquest, were bribed to suppress any mention of the proceedings.

SOO CANAL IS WRECKED.

Three Ships and Many Lives Are Endangered by Accident.

With all the weight of Lake Superior behind it, an ungoverned torrent of water now rushes through the $4,000,000 Canadian canal built to carry vessels around the impassable rapids of the Saint Mary's River at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. The entire fall of approximately twenty feet is concentrated in the lock which was wrecked Wednesday when the steamer Perry G. Walker of the Gilchrist fleet rammed her bow through the lower gate.

The upper gates were open when the Walker crushed open the lower gates and the tremendous power of the rapids was given instant play. The steamer Assiniboia, a big Canadian Pacific passenger liner, moored within the lock chamber, was torn away from her moorings. Riding on the crest of the flood, she jammed the Walker from her path, the Assiniboia's port anchor ripping a hole in the Walker's side. The liner's engine crew put on full steam ahead in a desperate endeavor to give the big vessel steerageway, and, with her wheelsmen battling to overcome the swirling currents, the Assiniboia swept into the open reaches of the river below. The Assiniboia's cargo shifted, and this gave her a considerable list, and several plates on her port side forward of amidships were loosened. The Walker was whirled around several times, and finally landed on a shoal out of the channel. It is said she is undamaged below the water line.

The ore-laden steamer Crescent City of the Pittsburg Steamship Company, which was just entering the locks from Lake Superior when the accident occurred, was swept downstream like a feather. She overtook the Assiniboia and struck the latter two glancing blows after having a great hole torn in her side as she swept past the broken lower gate. Tugs caught her and towed her to the American side, where she settled to the bottom. Both the upper gates of the lock and one lower gate were wrenched from their moorings. The other lower gate still hangs to its fastenings, twisted and broken.

The loss to the Canadian government will probably reach $250,000 and the damage to the Crescent City is estimated at $100,000. The damage to the steamers Walker and Assiniboia was comparatively light. Captain Mosher of the steamer Walker declares that the accident was caused by his engineer making a mistake and throwing his lever to "full speed ahead" on the captain's signal to "back up."

BALLOON INDIANA LAST TO LAND

Fisher and Bambaugh Descend Six Miles North of Dickson, Tenn.

Carl Fisher and G. L. Bumbaugh of Indianapolis, who started from there Saturday afternoon in the national balloon race, landed with their balloon, Indiana, six miles north of Dickson, Tenn., at 6 p. m., Monday, according to advices received. It was the last balloon to land. The aeronauts had landed previously at Ashland City, Tenn., to take on water. According to a dispatch from that town they landed on a pile of ties. They reascended and started northwest. They maintained, according to the dispatch, that the fact that they did not touch ground would prevent their being disqualified. Dr. Goethe Link and J. R. Irvin of the balloon Indianapolis did not know they had won the first prize in the handicap balloon race until they reached Louisville.

It is reported on good authority that J. P. Morgan & Co. have underwritten $15,000,000 of the $60,000,000 of bonds to be issued by the Chicago Great Western Railroad.

The Soo Railroad Company has let the contract for the construction of 220 miles of track from Moose Lake on the Duluth line to Thief River Falls on the Winnipeg line.

conditions for the month of May than in the corresponding month of last year are indicated in preliminary reports of the principal Western railroads.

The stockholders of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company have been called to a meeting at which plans for the merging of twenty-one subsidiary lines under one corporation will be executed. This will not affect the Iron Mountain lines, however. When this is done the stock of the company will be increased from $100,000,000 to $240,000,000, or about the total of the capital stock of the lines involved.

The new train service which the Burlington and Northern Pacific systems have combined to put in force between Chicago and Seattle to make close connection with the Pennsylvania's eighteen-hour flier from New York is expected to result in the transmission of mail and passengers from New York to Seattle in four days. The actual schedule time for this service is ninety-five hours and thirty-five minutes for coast to coast. The Burlington and Northern Pacific also has put on another train leaving Chicago at night and due to reach Seattle in seventy-two hours.

The reorganization committee for the Seaboard Air Line Railway has completed most of the details of its plans, the main points being elimination of the voting trust, no foreclosure, fixed charges to be reduced 25 per cent and no assessments on stock.

The reported refusal of the Hawley interests now in control of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, to sell to the Pennsylvania has given color to the rumor that they are preparing to buy connecting links which will make that system a trans-continental line to compete with the existing trunk lines.

WHOLE NATION PAYS HOMAGE TO WRIGHTS

Aviators in Washington Receive Aero Club Medals from President Taft.

THOUSANDS ATTEND CEREMONY

Governors Send Laudatory Messages Which Are to Be Given to the "Conquerors of the Air."

The achievement of man-flight, for which men have striven for more than 4,000 years, was celebrated in Washington Thursday. After receiving homage from the rulers of Europe, Wilbur and Orville Wright, of Dayton, Ohio, on that day received their first public recognition by their fellow countrymen. In the east room of the White House President Taft presented to the inventors the gold medals awarded to them by the Aero Club of America to commemorate the invention of the first successful flying machine.

The event was one of national interest. The governors of the various States sent laudatory messages congratulating the Wrights on their success. These, together with the resolutions adopted by the numerous scientific organizations and letters written by prominent scientists, have been put in book form and will be presented to the Wrights.

The Wright brothers, after being entertained at luncheon by the Aero Club of Washington, proceeded to the White House. They were presented to the President by Representative Herbert Parsons of New York, who told of their great achievements. In presenting the medals, President Taft spoke briefly. More than 1,000 invitations had been sent out for the White House ceremony.

At its annual meeting last year the Aero Club of America, the pioneer aviation club in the United States, elected the Wrights to honorary membership and decided to award to each a gold medal. These were procured at a cost of $2,300, obtained through the subscriptions of its members. The medals bear the likenesses of the two brothers on one side and an inscription on the reverse side.

Wilbur and Orville Wright, accompanied by their sister, Miss Katherine Wright, were met at the station by a delegation from the Aero Club of America. The Wright brothers were taken to the Cosmos Club, where they were entertained.

$650,000 FIRE: MAN KILLED.

Big Mill and Elevator of Cereal Company at Decatur, Ill., Destroyed.

In a fire which started shortly after 1 a. m. Tuesday from electric wiring on the sixth floor of the mill of the Decatur Cereal Company, the entire plant was destroyed, with a loss of $650,000. The insurance is $165,000. In addition to 80,000 bushels of corn in an adjacent elevator, also owned by the Decatur Cereal Company, were destroyed. In an effort to rescue some of the office effects of the firm, John Sheehy, a fireman, was struck on the head by a falling timber and was instantly killed. The buildings were situated at Eldorado and Vandyke streets, with a frontage of two blocks on the Wabash railroad. The elevator had a capacity of 100,000 bushels of corn. The entire local fire department responded to the general alarm, but from a lack of water pressure they could do nothing to check the progress of the blaze. The company manufactured starch, but one of its main products was corn grits, used largely by brewers. It employed a large number of men and was one of the biggest manufactories of Decatur.

THOUSANDS TO GET MORE PAY.

Steel Companies Announce Good Trade Will Enable Increase.

Wages of the 7,000 men in the Pennsylvania Steel Company at Steelton, Pa., which were cut 10 per cent on April 1, are to be restored on July 1. The 2,000 employes of the Maryland Steel Company at Baltimore are also to profit by the same increase because of the improvement in trade.

Ground has been broken at Sparrow's Point, Md., for the new open hearth steel department of the Maryland Company, to cost $1,000,000. It also is announced that the National Tube Company's Riverside works will resume operations in the steel plate and tube departments, employing 5,000 men. The United States Steel Corporation is now operating 80 per cent of its blast furnace capacity, the highest level reached since the panic of October, 1907. Orders have been coming in at the rate of between 30,000 and 40,000 tons a day.

One Hurt; Forty-five in Fire Panic.

One fireman was injured when the walls of F. Silberman & Co.'s rag warehouse and the factory building of the Ohio Sash and Door Company, on Columbia road, Cleveland, fell, as the result of a fire which destroyed the buildings. Forty-five girls, employed as sorters, on the second and third floors of the rag warehouse, escaped safely, but in a panic.

100 DIE IN BIG QUAKE.

Southern France Feels Shock and Damage Will Amount to Millions.

At least 100 dead, with every possibility of the death list growing much larger, and 100 hurt is the result of the sharp earthquake which devastated several towns and villages in the southernmost part of France, particularly in the departments of Herault and Bouches-du-Rhone.

Great suffering is reported from the remoter places, owing to a lack of bread and the necessaries of life, before the arrival of assistance. The casualties may be greatly increased, as the ruins have not yet been entirely searched. The villages of St. Canat and Rognes were completely demolished by the earthquake, and Lambesc, which is twelve miles from Aix, suffered heavily. Survivors are sleeping in tents, and the streets are impassable. In many places they have been torn up and are incumbered with masses of rocks. Houses, public buildings and churches were crumbled to pieces. Among other villages seriously damaged are Vauvenargues, Venelles, Pelissanne, Puy-Ste-Reparade and Arguilles.

The victims at St. Cannat and Rognez were horribly mutilated. There were evidences that several of the victims had lived for hours imprisoned by the debris before they died. The people rushed into the streets when the first shock occurred, crying out in terror. Many of them returned to the rescue of their families. At Rognez a family of four was buried in the ruins. Their cries could be heard throughout the night, but all were dead in the morning when a rescuing party reached them. At St. Cannat an old man and his son were watching a billiard game. They were instantly killed. The players escaped with slight bruises. The chateau Valmousse, near St. Cannat, was badly damaged. The communal chateau at Arguilles was split in two. The historic village of Vernegues was wrecked, but no one was killed. The monetary loss in the affected district is very heavy.

ARMY CAPTAIN IS SHOT.

Enraged Soldier Probably Fatally Wounds J. C. Raymond at Fort.

Captain John C. Raymond, of Troop B, Second United States Cavalry, and a member of one of the most prominent army families in the country, may die as the result of a wound received in a shooting affray at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, Sunday.

Upon being reprimanded by Captain Raymond for overstaying his leave of absence from the post, Corporal Lisle Crabtree drew a revolver and began firing at his commanding officer. The first bullet went wild, the second struck Sergeant James H. Washburn, the third hit Captain Raymond and the fourth found a victim in Corporal Elijah Such. The enraged trooper then turned the pistol on himself and fired the remaining bullet into his heart. With the exception of Captain Raymond, none of the four is considered seriously injured. Immediately after the shooting Major Bratton, surgeon of the regiment, had the officer removed to Mercy Hospital in Des Moines in a special street car, where an X-ray examination showed that the bullet had entered the front of Captain Raymond's neck and passed through, striking the backbone. His body is completely paralyzed from the neck down and only slight hopes are entertained for his recovery. Even if the injured officer should live it is probable that he will be paralyzed.

Captain Raymond is a son of Brigadier General Charles W. Raymond, of the engineer corps, retired. He is 37 years old and was graduated from West Point in 1897. He is married and has two children.

DR. E. E. HALE IS DEAD; END COMES SUDDENLY

Famous Preacher and Chaplain of the Senate Expires at Roxbury, Mass.

WAS AN AUTHOR OF NOTE.

Born in 1822 of Revolutionary Stock and Showed Precocity as Child —Ordained at Age of 20.

Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, chaplain of the United States Senate, died at his home in Roxbury, Mass., Thursday. A week previous he was present at a celebration in honor of the ninetieth birthday of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, his contemporary in many of the reform movements with which both had been identified for more than fifty years. At the bedside were Mrs. Hale, Philip L. Hale, a son; Ellen, a daughter, and the family physician.

As an advocate of world peace and a humanitarian whose activities have been many and forceful, Dr. Hale, who was pastor emeritus of the old South Church of Boston, which pulpit he filled regularly from 1856 until 1900, had a career of usefulness that is unique in American history.

Born in Boston April 3, 1822, Dr. Hale came of famed New England stock. His father, Nathan Hale, was a nephew of the patriot whose dying utterance, "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country," is graven deeply in the chronicles of the nation's struggle for liberty. His mother was a sister of Edward Everett, for whom her son was named.

It has been said of Dr. Hale that "he was cradled in the sheets of a newspaper," for his father was publisher of the Boston Advertiser, the first daily to be published in New England. Educated for a life of letters, the boy made rapid strides in school, and at 17 was graduated from Harvard University. At 20 he was licensed to become a minister. He regarded war as a barbarism which settled only questions of military strength and not questions of right and wrong, and he had a large part, as editor of the Peace Crusade, in bringing about The Hague tribunal. As an author, in which his aim was moral rather than artistic, Dr. Hale produced several enduring works.

In defiance of advancing years, Dr. Hale continued in the public eye until stricken by his last illness. On the death of Dr. William H. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the Senate, Dr. Hale succeeded him, his hoary head and rugged frame making an impressive figure in that chamber.

FLOOD LOSS IN COLORADO.

Four Lives Have Been Destroyed and Train Service Is Interrupted.

Floods due to heavy rains, in some instances approaching cloudbursts, and melting snow is causing damage in many sections of Colorado. Four lives have been lost in swollen streams, and much destruction of property caused. Train service in all directions has been interrupted. The Grand Junction water system is threatened by a flood in the Grand and Gunnison rivers, and other enterprises there face heavy damage. Around Greely the lowlands are being flooded by a sudden rise in the Cache la Poudre River. A dam southeast of Denver burst, and the water swept through the lower parts of the suburban town of Englewood, causing considerable damage. In the neighborhood of Limon the junction point of the Rock Island and the Union Pacific Railroads, a cloudburst changed the Big Sandy from a dry bed to a roaring river, flooding many farms in the low sections.

GEN. FUNSTON FIGHTS BURGLAR

Man Who Captured Aguinaldo Has a Pistol Duel He Doesn't Enjoy.

Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston, the man who captured Aguinaldo, fought a burglar in his bedroom in Leavenworth, Kan., the other morning. It was a duel with pistols. The burglar, who was a poor marksman, escaped. He didn't leave word whether he was wounded, but it is supposed he was not. Gen. Funston was silent about the affair till night, and then he discussed it as if he would rather capture another Aguinaldo than go through it again. He said the close-range firing made him nervous. The intruder was a sneak thief. The general noticed a closet door open slowly and a man emerge. The general reached under his pillow for his revolver. The intruder then opened fire, sending three bullets through the bed clothing. Funston also got in three shots, but by this time the intruder had gone.

Score of Others Injured in Blast Furnace Explosion.

Six men were burned to a crisp by molten iron, ten probably fatally injured and ten others seriously hurt in an explosion at the Martins Ferry (O.) blast furnace of the Wheeling Steel & Iron Company. Of the twenty injured men some had arms and legs burned off, and their bodies terribly burned.

HELD FOR BIG BANK SHORTAGE.

Bookkeeper Charged with Theft That May Reach $40,000.

Charged with having taken funds of the bank, Frederick H. Brigham, head bookkeeper of the Merchants' National Bank, of New Haven, Conn., was arrested and held in $10,000 bonds for the United States court. The amount named in the charge is $5,000, but it is said the shortage will reach $40,000. Brigham is about 47 years old and is married. He had been in the employ of the bank for eighteen years.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Further evidences of the improving state of business generally are seen in a lower record of failures and a new high five-day exhibit of heavy payments through the banks. The official report and other advices indicate that the crops make seasonable progress, the growing condition being entirely favorable. Unsettled weather here retarded full activity in the leading retail lines, but considerable demand developed in the wholesale branches of general merchandise and shipments by dry goods houses were larger than usual at this period. Transportation of freight and passengers show expansion. There is a notably increased marketing and outgo of grain, and heavier movements occur in finished products of the mills and factories and in lumber, wool and building materials.

Improved demands strengthen the conditions in iron and steel, and this causes more drawing upon capacity of furnaces, forges, foundries and car shops. Railroad needs come forward quite freely now and are of more variety and extent than recently noted. The effect stimulates preparations for extended enterprise in manufacturing and more hands find re-employment. Numerous bookings strengthen operations in pig iron, rails, equipment, brass working and furniture. Heavy consumers find the cost of supplies rising, and this induces wider buying to protect future requirements. The markets for raw materials are amply stocked, except hides, which decreased in variety and have firmer prices for the better qualities. Industrial prospects would be brighter with an early settlement of tariff revision, but much encouragement is derived from the excellent outlook in agriculture, values of the principal farm products assuring an accession of wealth to advance manufactures and distribution.

Bank clearings aggregate $275,103,417 for five days and exceed those for six days a year ago by 27.6 per cent. The total for the corresponding week in 1907 was $246,844,613.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 21, against 25 last week, 21 in 1908 and 14 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, against 6 last week, 8 in 1908 and 3 in 1907.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Reports from leading industries are, on the whole, favorable, so far as booking of future orders is concerned. Iron and steel are active in finished lines, though output is still below normal in some districts. Some wage advances are reported and resumptions of blast furnaces are reducing the floating labor supply. There is reported a widening demand for cotton goods; print cloths have regained the loss of a few weeks ago; woolen goods trade reports are of good business booked or pending, and wool, though less active than of late, is still very strong at high-level prices. The leather trade is active, with high prices ruling in sympathy with hides and skins, which are apparently scarce. Eastern shoe orders are fair. Shipments are 24 per cent larger than a year ago, but smaller than in any previous year back to 1902. Building trade reports confirm earlier predictions of a record spring construction in an enormous total far surpassing all previous monthly records ever compiled.

Business failure for the week ending with June 10 in the United States were 197, against 191 last week, 253 in the like week of 1908, 161 in 1907, 170 in 1906 and 175 in 1905. Failures in Canada for the week number 22, which compares with 29 last week and 24 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

Work of Congress

The woolen schedule was still under consideration in the Senate when at 5:30 o'clock Wednesday the usual recess for dinner was taken. Several votes were obtained during the day, and thus a number of paragraphs were passed upon. Among these were the paragraph on top waste, etc., on which the committee amendment increased the House rate on wool top waste and other wastes from 20 cents per pound to 30 cents per pound, which, on a division of the Senate, was adopted by a vote of 40 to 30. A vote was also obtained upon the committee amendment increasing the duty on shoddy from 20 cents per pound to 25 cents, and that on tops from 18 to 20 cents, the committee prevailing in both cases. Speeches were made during the day by Senators Warren and La Follette, the former advocating a generally increased duty, while the latter contended, as on previous occasions, for a general reduction. The two Senators engaged in a sharp controversy. Senator Dolliver declared that a "rag trust" exists, and was contradicted by Mr. Warren. A letter was read from ex-Governor Durbin of Indiana advising prompt action on the tariff bill. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

Senator Dolliver, assisted by eight or nine other progressive Republicans, mainly attempted Thursday to secure some concession in the wool schedule of the tariff bill. All their amendments were voted down by the usual majority. The wool schedule was debated all day and at 5:30 a recess was taken until 8 o'clock, when the discussion was resumed. The House was in session just eleven minutes and adjourned until Monday.

-:—:-

Income tax shared with the wool schedule the attention of the Senate during Friday's sitting of that body, and after discussion of an hour or more its further consideration was postponed until June 18. This action was the result of a motion made by Senator Aldrich, which followed a charge by Senator Bailey that undue influence was being brought to bear against the proposed income tax amendment to the tariff bill. Mr. Aldrich declared that he knew of no such effort, but pleaded for the postponement of the question until the schedules should be disposed of. The Senate refused, by the decisive vote of 59 to 8, to recommit the wool schedule to the Committee on Finance on motion of Mr. Cummins and thus finally concluded the consideration of that schedule. Only a few of the progressive Republicans supported the motion. Openly declaring his opinion that Senator Aldrich had lost the confidence of other Republican Senators which a leader should have, Mr. La Follette made a determined fight to compel the adoption of amendments to the wool schedule which were Thursday presented by himself. There were two dozen or more of them, and all were voted down, 44 to 32. Senator Bacon forced votes on two amendments reducing to 30 per cent ad valorem the duty on wool and woolen goods, but he failed to obtain the support of any of the Republican Senators, even the progressives refusing to follow him. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

Having completed consideration of items of the tariff bill that had been passed over under objections by Senators during its second reading the adjournment of the Senate Saturday marked an important period in the progress of the measure. When the bill is again taken up it will be upon its third reading for the final disposition of items upon which the most pronounced objections have been made. In completing the second reading of the bill, works of art, over twenty years old, and collections illustrating the progress of the arts over one hundred years old, which were placed in the free list by the committee on finance, were retained there after an interesting debate by a vote of 53 to 15. The starch industry received protection by a reversal of the recommendations made by the committee by which tapioca and sago flour will be subject to a duty of 1 cent a pound when not imported for food. Crude potash, potash carbonate, caustic potash and radium were placed upon the free list. The House was not in session.

A TALE OF A CARAVAN

By Robert Buchanan

CHAPTER XXII.—(Continued.)

Here Marshall turned with a wink to William Jones, and nudged him in the ribs.

"Don't you think now," he asked, "it might be worth while looking for it in that little underground parlor of yours, down alongside the sea?"

William Jones uttered a despairing groan, and fell on his knees.

"I'm ruined!" he cried. "O, Mr. Monk, it's your doing! Lord help me! They knows everything."

"Hold your tongue!" said Monk, with a look of mad contempt and hatred. "These men are only playing upon your fears, but they can not frighten me."

"No," remarked the detective, lighting his cigar, which had gone out. "I think we shall even manage that in time."

As he spoke he carelessly, and as if inadvertently, drew out a pair of steel handcuffs, which he looked at reflectively, threw up and caught underhand in the air.

"You accuse me of assassination?" said Monk, trembling violently. "I warn you to beware, for I will not suffer such accusations without seeking redress. If you have any proof of the truth of your preposterous charge, produce it."

At this moment Matt, looking bright as sunshine, leaped out of the Caravan.

"There's my proof," said Marshall. "Miss Monk, this amiable bridegroom of yours denies being concerned in harming Mr. Charles Brinkley. Is he telling the truth?"

Matt's face darkened, and she looked at Monk with eyes of cordial detestation.

"No," she said, "he's lying."

"Matt," cried Monk, fiercely, "take care!"

"He's lying," she repeated, not heeding him. "I see him do it with my own two eyes, and I see William Jones helping him and looking on; they thought that no one was nigh, but I was. I was hiding behind them sacks and barrels in the case."

* * * * * * *

Monk now felt that the game was almost up, for he was beset on every side, and the very ground seemed opening under his feet. The wretched Jones, in a state bordering on frenzy, remained on his knees wailing over his ruin. The two strangers, Lightwood and Marshall, looked on as calm but interested spectators. Matt, having delivered her home thrust of accusation, stood and gazed into Monk's face with cool defiance.

"It is a plot!" Monk cried, presently; "an infamous plot to ruin me! You have been tampering, I see, with this wild girl, whom you foolishly suppose kin to me by blood. Arrest me, if you please—I shall not take the trouble to resist, for I am perfectly innocent in this matter."

He added, while they looked on at one another as if somewhat puzzled:

"As to the girl's relationship with my dead cousin, the very idea is absurd. Where are the proofs of her birthright?"

"Here," said a quiet voice.

Monk turned his eyes, and started back in wonder, while William Jones shrieked and fell forward on his face. Standing before them in the sunshine was the reality or the semblance of—the murdered young man of the Caravan!

CHAPTER XXIII.

Yes, it was the artist himself, looking a little pale, and carrying one arm in a sling, but, otherwise, to all appearance, in good health.

Monk had strong nerves, but he could not prevent himself from uttering a wild cry of horror and wonder. At the same moment, Matt went to the young man's side, and with an air of indescribable trust and sweetness, took his hand—the hand which was free—and put it to her lips.

"The proof is here," he said, calmly, "here upon my person. I am not quite dead, you see, Mr. Monk, of Monkshurst, and I thought I should like to bring it to you myself. It consists, as you are aware, of Colonel Monk's dying message, written on the fly-leaf of his prayer book, and of the marriage certificate of his wife; both these having been placed upon this child's person, concealed by the unsuspecting and illiterate Jones, and found by me after a lapse of many years."

Monk did not speak; his tongue was frozen. He stood aghast, opening and shutting his clinched hands spasmodically, and shaking like a leaf. Reassured to some extent by the sound of the voice, unmistakably appertaining to a person of flesh and blood, William Jones gradually uplifted his face, and looked in ghastly wonder at the speaker.

"You will be anxious to ascertain," proceeded Brinkley, with his old air of lightness, "by what accident, or special Providence, I arose from the grave in which you politely entombed me. The explanation is very simple. My young friend here, Matt, the foundling, or, as I should rather call her, Miss Monk, of Monkshurst, came to my assistance, attended to my injuries, which were not so serious as you imagined, and enabled me, before daybreak, to gain the kindly shelter of my Caravan. Tim and a certain rural doctor did the rest. I am sorry to disappoint you, Mr. Monk, but I felt bound to keep my promise—to interfere seriously with your little arrangements, if you persistently refused to do justice to this young lady."

As he spoke, Monk uttered a savage oath and rushed toward the road; but Marshall was after him in a moment, and sprang upon him. There was a quick struggle. Suddenly Monk drew a knife, opened it, and brandished it in the air; so that it would have gone ill with his assailant if the herculean Tim, coming to the rescue, had not pinioned him from behind. In another moment the knife was lying on the grass, and Monk was neatly handcuffed by the detective.

"Now, governor, you'd better take it quietly!" said Marshall, while Monk struggled, and gnashed his teeth in impotent rage. "You're a smart one, you are, but the game's up at last."

Monk recovered himself and laughed fiercely.

"Let me go! Of what do you accuse me? It was murder just now, but since the murdered person is alive I should like to know on what charge you arrest me."

"Oh, there's no difficulty about that!" said Brinkley, looking at him superciliously. "In the first place, you have by fraud and perjury possessed yourself of what never legally belonged to you. In the second place, you attempted murder, at any rate. But upon my life, I don't think you are worth prosecuting. I think, Mr. Marshall, you might let him go."

"It's letting a mad dog loose, sir," replied Marshall. "He'll hurt somebody."

"What do you say, Miss Monk?" said Brinkley. "This amiable looking person is your father's cousin. Shall I release your bridegroom in order that you may go with him to the altar of Hymen and complete the ceremony?"

"I hate him!" cried Matt; "I should like to drown him in the sea.

Brinkley laughed.

"Your sentiments are natural, but unChristian. And the gentle Jones, now, who is looking at you so affectionatily, what would you do with him? Drown him in the sea, too?"

"No, no, Matt," interposed William Jones, abjectly; "speak up for me, Matt. I ha' been father to you all these years."

Matt seemed perplexed what to say. So Brinkley again took up the conversation.

"On reflection we will refer William Jones to his friends the 'coast guard chaps.' I think he will be punished enough by the distribution of his little property in the cave. Eh, Mr. Jones?"

Jones only wrung his hands and wailed, thinking of his precious treasure.

"And so, aMtt," continued Brinkley, "there will be no wedding after all. I'm afraid you're awfully disappointed?"

Matt replied by taking his hand again, lifting it to her lips, and kissing it fondly. The young man turned his head away, for his eyes had suddenly grown full of grateful tears.

CHAPTER XXIV.

My tale is told. The adventure of the Caravan has ended. Little more remains to be said.

Monk, of Monkshurst, was not brought to trial for his iniquities, but he was sorely enough punished by the loss of his ill-gotten estates. Before the claim of the foundling was fully proved he left England, never to return. Whether he is alive or dead I can not tell.

William Jones, too, escaped legal punishment. A severer retribution came upon him in the seizure and dispersal of the hoards in the great cave. So sorely did he take his loss to heart that he crept to his bed, and had an attack of brain fever. When he reappeared on the scene of his old plunderings his intellect was weakened, and he showed curious evidences of imbecility. But the ruling passion remained strong within him. I saw him only last summer, rambling on the sea shore, talking incoherently to himself, and watching the sea in search of wreckage as of old.

And Matt?

Well, her title to Monkshurst and the property was fully proved. For a long time she did not realize her good fortune, but gradually the pleasant truth dawned upon her in a sunrise of nice dresses, jewelry, and plenty of money. Chancery stepped in like a severe foster parent, and sent her to school. There she remained for several years; but Charles Brinkley, who had first taken in hand the vindication of her claims, and who never ceased to be interested in her, saw her from time to time, and took particular note of her improvement in her grammar and the gentle art of speech.

"Matt," he said, when they met last Christmas in London, and when he saw before him, instead of a towsy girl, as bright and buxom a young lady as ever wore purple raiment and fine linen, "Matt, you are 'growed up' at last!"

Matt blushed and hung her head, with a touch of her old manner.

"Yes, I am grown up, as you say. I wonder what William Jones would think if he saw me now."

"And if he noticed these pretty boots, Matt, and heard you play the piano and prattle a little in French. Upon my word, it's a transformation! You always were a nice girl, though."

"Do you really think so?" asked Matt shyly. "Did you always think so?"

"Certainly."

"Even when I told you I liked you so much, and you told me 'it wouldn't do'?"

It was Brinkley's turn to blush now. It was clear that Matt, despite other changes, still retained her indomitable frankness.

"Even then," he replied, laughing. "But I say you were a precocious youngster. You proposed to me, you know!"

"I know I did," said Matt, "and it wasn't leap year then."

She added still more slyly:

"But it's leap year now!"

Their eyes met. Both blushed more and more.

"Matt, don't! It won't do, you know! Yes, I say so still. You're a rich woman, and I'm only a poor painter. You must marry some great swell."

But Matt replied:

"I shall never marry any one but you!"

"You won't? Do you mean it?"

"Of course I do."

He caught her in his arms.

"My darling Matt—yes, I shall call you by that dear name to the end of the chapter. You love me, then? I can't believe it!"

"I have loved you," she answered, laughing, "ever since I first came—'to be took!'"

And she rested her head on his shoulder, just as she had done in the old days, when she was an unsophisticated child of Nature.

"So there's to be a wedding after all," he said, kissing her. "Matt, I've an idea!"

"Yes?"

"When we marry, suppose we arrange to spend the honeymoon in—a Caravan!"

(The End.)

Hiccoughs.

Did you ever take nine swallows of water to cure the hiccoughs? Do you remember the time some one scared the hiccoughs away by telling you of a whipping due for some meanness?

Well, science has been studying hiccoughs and caught the hiccoughs by the "nape of the neck." The nine swallows of water had a little science in it, and so did the scare cure. The scientific hiccough cure consists in pressing down to numbness the nerve that connects the stomach, heart, lungs and brain, the pneumogastric nerve. The pressure partially and locally paralyzes this nerve and of necessity the hiccoughing must cease.

Have the hiccoughing patient sit down and be at ease, with the muscles of the neck relaxed as much as possible. Grasp both sides of the neck somewhat toward the back part and press down steadily and as hard as the subject may permit for about one minute, having the patient work the head from side to side. Within about one minute the nerve will be numbed and rested, and the spasmodic motion will cease. It may require longer pressure in some cases, but the result is sure if patience is maintained.—Ohio State Journal.

A Hazard of Hearts

By ALIX JOHN

Copyright, 1900, by Frank Leslie Publishing House

THIS serial is a work of merit that will be fascinating to all general readers, but particularly so to those who love a good, earnest, practical story of every-day life. In this romance the heroine, Mathilde Thorne, is a charming girl, and the hero, Jem Stewart, a man who marries her first and teaches her to love him afterwards.

The author of the story has very interestingly depicted scenes and incidents that form a most pleasing picture of life as it is seen daily, and the naturalness of the romance will entrance every lover of good literature.

To the family circle, "A Hazard of Hearts" will especially appeal, and young and old will be eager to read the story to the end. It is a clean, bright, sterling romance, and as such we recommend it to our readers. It is one of several very superior serials which we have been fortunate in securing.

CHAPTER I.

The steamship St. Lawrence had been a fashionable mailboat in its day, crowded on its summer trips by wealthy Montreal and Toronto folk.

Those days now lay in the dim distance, though the St. Lawrence was till a good sea boat, albeit one of the slowest in the line, and one in which economically minded or impecunious travelers could obtain passages at rates much lower than in some other boats. There were but a handful of any sort of passengers on this mid-December voyage, for who but the most homeless or friendless of wanderers, or those under the stress of the strongest necessity, would be willing to spend Christmas day out upon that desolate waste of grey, turbulent waters known as the North Atlantic.

Rarely there does a day's sunshine reveal the blue-green light and purple shadows of that swaying, surging space.

Rarely does the white flicker of a sail, or the long, grey trail from a steamer's funnel bring a trace of man's existence into that chaos, which seems as though forgotten in the work of creation and left as in the space before days were, when "the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep, and the Spirit of God moved upon the waters."

Of these few passengers, who, from necessity or choice, had isolated themselves from all familiar surroundings at the supreme festal season of the year, the greater part were men.

There was a group of commercial travelers, keeping together in the smoking room, with much convivial consumption of the cheaper varieties of fluids, with much card-playing and noisy gossip of their craft.

But there were three or four other men of another type, whose shabby clothes and unkempt appearance were emphasized by the trim prosperity of the dapper little bagmen.

The hands of these men bore marks of toil, and their faces were bronzed and roughened from contact with the extremes of summer heat and winter cold.

Yet the significance of untrimmed hair and shabby clothes was contradicted, with some of this latter group, by occasional flashes of voice or manner that betrayed a former contact with the great world. As these men earnestly discussed the prospect of Klondyke mines or British Columbian ranches, a looker-on might have noticed some phrase or trick of expression which had been, a few years ago, a temporary shibboleth of the gilded youth of London clubland.

Men from the wilderness of the great Northwest these, ranging in rank from the son of some great historic house who "Faith, he went the pace and went it blind," down to the farmer's plodding son, to whom the owhership of his Manitoban acres was a perpetual awe and delight; but all, gentleman and yeoman, equally delighted to have secured a few winter months' holiday in England.

Amidst the miscellaneous masculine element only three women were to be counted. One was a New England sea captain's wife, shrivelled into a sort of mummy-like condition by the storms of many seas, the suns of many lands.

All day she sat in the respectable seclusion of the ladies' cabin, exchanging experiences with the stewardess and sewing steadily on through the worst weather at garments for her two solemn, self-reliant little girls, who roamed the ship with the light dexterity of the stewards.

Another woman was the bride of a commercial traveler, having come on board adorned with much cheap jewelry and a large feathered hat, amid the jocular farewells of a group of friends of much the same style as herself. This lady, after the first hour, devoted to the consumption of candy, had never raised her head from the pillow for days.

The third of the women passengers was the one who counted as a social fact. In the important point of immunity from sea-sickness he had almost occupied the proud position of a heroine of romance. Almost, but not quite, for even Miss Thorne had disappeared from the saloon during the first bad blow that had met them near the Canadian coast, to reappear two days later with paler face and more languid movements. Many of the men, however, had done the same; and small wonder it was, considering the tossing about which the St. Lawrence had sustained.

But it was now the sixth day of the voyage, and Miss Thorne was by undisputed right the ruling lady of the ship—Miss Thorne, whose young face and figure formed the pleasantest central spot to masculine eyes in that dreary saloon, even though the set gravity of her face matched but too well the fresh black that clothed her figure.

IT DID NOT TAKE HIM LONG * * * TO GET THE PRINCIPAL FACTS OF MISS THORNE'S LIFE."

No deck life had been possible during that week of storms, and as the poor old St. Lawrence did not boast of the modernity of a music room or library, Miss Thorne's cushions and rugs were heaped in a corner of the red plush divan which ran around the saloon. This corner, being recognized as her own peculiar haunt, was approached by the Northwest men with deference when on social thoughts intent, or, rather, by the two or three from the Northwest to whom such social thoughts were a possibility.

Even a returned African explorer can hardly be more susceptible to the attractions of feminine proximity than is a young Englishman who has spent two or three seasons on a lonely ranch or in a rough crowded mining camp.

"LOOKING AS THOUGH THE WORLD HAD GONE TO PIECES."

Young Charlie Hudson, who had been fretting and fuming at not getting home in time to spend Christmas among his assembled brothers and sisters and cousins, forgot his grievances when allowed to chatter at Miss Thorne's side, or to help her to pour out tea on extra rough days, when the task was no sinecure. Captain Kerr, that kindly little Irish gentleman, kept her supplied from his own apparently inexhaustible stock of fiction, and asked nothing better than to be allowed to yarn away about the wife and children whom he was on his way home to join.

And Mr. Stewart, tall, gaunt, haggard, with impassive face from which a pair of sportsmen's eyes looked keenly out under drooping lips—what part did he take in the group?

Lounging in his usual listless fashion on the sofa, putting in some keen taunt or gibe at everything under heaven or earth, or else letting fall some queer out-of-the-way fact or hint at some startling bit of personal experience, as his share in the conversation, stoically indifferent to the severity of the storm or to the length of the voyage, utterly reticent as to any future after the landing at Liverpool—how was it that he had established a tacit footing of greater intimacy than had the other two?

Wherein that intimacy consisted Miss Thorne might have been puzzled to say, and yet she felt that it was there, if only in a subtle comprehension of the seasons of each other's dark moods.

That she should ever be under the dominion of such moods was probably a quite unconsidered theory to either of the other two men, for the girl's manner might always have been marked by the same dreamy stillness—"the perfection of repose," Charlie Hudson called it, while Captain Kerr praised the intelligence of so good a listener; and it was only Mr. Stewart who guessed that that same manner might have been a blythe one but for the absent-mindedness entailed by an overmastering recollection or anxiety.

Pretending to doze in an opposite corner of the saloon, Stewart had watched the open book remaining with unturned leaves in the girl's hands, while she stared ahead with the fixity that drew weary lines around the young mouth.

"Looking as though her world had gone to pieces around her," he said to himself as one who may himself have gone through that bewildering process.

The surface reason for these times of sorrowful brooding seemed to lie in the new black dress that she wore.

That the captains of Canadian steamships gather a fair amount of gossip as they come and go was a fact not unknown to Mr. Stewart.

It did not take long, in a late evening chat over a pipe in the chart-room, to get at the principal facts in Miss Thorne's history.

MENACE TO THE APPLE TREE.

Speculation as to What Might Happen if All Apples Were Coreless.

We have already viewed Colorado's new coreless apples from several positions, one of which also brought King Edward into the field of vision, engaged in the kindly task of expressing the emotions experienced by him "after taking," but the subject is a large one, as well as interesting, says the New York Times, and it may be worth while to take another look at it. The question, is the coreless apple better than the apple with a core? was answered with a vehement affirmative by the king, and as he, in the course of his long and active life, has tasted most varieties of most fruits, including, if there is anything in rumor, some described by the specialists as "prohibita," his verdict is a weighty one, if not absolutely final, and it's no wonder that the ingenious pomologist has taken pains to publish the royal commendation of his apple fast and far.

But while we have now as little doubt as he that the coreless apple is good—to eat—second thoughts on the subject have raised in our minds a few doubts if in the long run it will prove advantageous for men or for apples to turn the latter so far away from the way in which nature intended them to go.

Coreless means seedless, and seedless means doomed to an extinction that may be remote, but it is as sure as sure can be. Were all apple trees rendered seedless, the duration of the species would be limited to the time during which, without the invaluable aid of "crossing," the trees then alive could continue to send up from their roots a constantly deteriorating series of new shoots. Into that sad condition some cruel accident of environment has already thrown the banana, and if today something—a frost, an insect or the like—should kill all the banana plants there never would be any more of them, in this world at least.

Persistent propagation of the potato from its tubers alone has had upon that precious vegetable an effect that already is alarming many of its most thoughtful friends, and they foresee the necessity, in a not very distant future, of going back to the miserable little nubbins that grow wild in Mexico and developing them over again into the treasure houses of starch that do so much toward feeding the world—a long and costly task. We are not really frightened by the Colorado man's apple or by the king's approval of it, but the situation is not quite as simple as it seems, and it will be well to keep in mind the fact that "cores" have uses as well as inconveniences.

Mistaken.

"Why didn't you marry that girl you were going with?"

"I found I was greatly mistaken in her."

"How was that?"

"I thought she would marry me, but she wouldn't."—Houston Post.

Where He Made Good.

"You don't make very good music with that instrument," said the innocent bystander to the man behind the bass drum as the band ceased to play.

"No," admitted the drum pounder, "but I drown a heap of bad."

Astonished.

"Well, I am astonished, waiter."

"But you ordered eggs, sir."

"Yes, but they were so long coming I expected chickens."—Houston Post.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Henry B. Stoy, a widely-known newspaper correspondent, died suddenly of heart disease at his home in New Albany. He was 62 years of age.

Four members of the family of Louis Gasser, just north of Washington, are in a critical condition, due to ptomaine poisoning, caused by the eating of tainted corn.

Montgomery Hamilton, of Fort Wayne, aged 64 years, formerly one of the leading wholesale grocers and at one time Councilman, died suddenly from heart disease at his home.

George H. Corya, a farmer of Jennings County, shot and killed himself. He was prominent for the "drys" in the recent election and the excitement is said to have brought about a nervous derangement.

Charles Martin, of Wabash, former justice of the peace, was sentenced to jail for six months for holding Court illegally at Lakes, outside of the county, and extorting money from the men arrested by false pretenses.

Charles Fair, of Wabash, aged 40 years, struck by lightning when standing under a tree, fell dead and his clothing burst into flames. Mrs. Fair, his wife, was seriously burned when fighting the flames in his clothing.

Thirty years of age and divorced for the second time, Mrs. Ida Stoker, of Evansville, went from the courtroom directly to the County Clerk's office, where she was granted a license to marry Davis H. Daugherty, a furniture man, who also is 30 years of age and has been married twice before.

Thomas Hawkins, of Evansville, a non-union employe of the Evansville & Southern Indiana Traction Company, was assaulted by Joshua Cayins, an ice-man, who jabbed him in the side with ice hooks, inflicting an ugly wound. Both men were placed under arrest. The men came to blows over the street car strike.

William West, a laborer, was shot dead by his brother John at Evansville. The latter says he told his brother not to come around his house any more, and when he showed up he shot him. It is alleged bad feeling existed between the men for several years. John is in jail. He is also a laborer and has a wife and several children.

The Grand Trunk train wrecking mystery, which for two months has engaged the attention of a dozen railroad detectives and private detectives, was solved by the confession of Willie Osborne, a 15-year-old lad, living near Griffith. Only by the closest shave were the lives of over 300 passengers on a Chicago-bound vestibuled flyer saved from death or injury.

Tipton County will attempt an exhibit this year to be given by and for the farmers especially, the only part of the town people being to give the use of the streets and furnish the place in which it is to be held. The Tipton County Corn Club will conduct a corn and live stock show, lasting two and possibly three days. Attractive premiums will be offered and the show will be for Tipton County exhibitors only.

Burglars are busy again, and the latest stunt is a progressive luncheon, a popular idea in society circles some time ago. One burglar carried out this idea by going to the home of Joseph D. Halbert in Columbus, where he stole some boiled ham, home-made bread, beans, butter and the like and made a square meal from the icebox. For dessert he went to the home of J. D. Emmons, two doors away, and purloined some strawberries and also a bottle of cream.

Bones found in the ruins of the burned home of Coben Salters in Muncie have led the authorities to institute an investigation on the theory that Salters might have been burned up. The last time Salters was seen was shortly before the blaze, when he entered his home with the intention of going to bed. Salters and his family had been visiting in Indianapolis prior to the fire for about a month. He returned unaccompanied by his family. One mysterious phase of the affair is that it has been reported that a wagon from a local second-hand store took away some of Salter's household furniture.

Sheriff John W. Ader, of Danville, has returned from Michigan City, where he went to take Robert Jolly, the Indianapolis murderer, who was found to be insane, to the Indiana colony for the criminal insane. Jolly killed his 9-year-old daughter Gladys, at Indianapolis, June 12, 1907, by pouring carbolic acid down her throat. Jolly did not like the verdict of insanity, and attempted to take the stand in order that he might tell the jury he was guilty, in the hope that they would find him guilty and sentence him to death. Sheriff Ader says Jolly insisted until the last that he should have been executed.

Earl Davis, of Mankson, 18 years old, and his pony were killed by lightning during a storm recently. Davis was riding in the fields near his home when struck by the bolt.

Earl Chamness, of Richmond, proprietor of a saloon, was seriously wounded by Arthur Chauncey. Chamness and Chauncey are relatives by marriage and during a quarrel Chamness is alleged to have attacked Chauncey who pulled a pocket knife and slashed Chamness several times.

Mrs. Amelia Hanafee, negress, wife of John Hanafee, of New Albany, died of lockjaw at St. Edward's Hospital. The malady developed recently from a slight injury received ten days ago.

William Hall, of Evansville, a negro, caught a gang of white boys drinking and asked them for some. When they refused he pulled his gun and shot into the crowd, wounding Earle Peck in the leg and the latter's brother, Annis Peck, in the shoulder. The boys seized the negro and would have lynched him had not officers rescued Hall. He was arrested.

At target practice recently Roland Sisson, of Princeton, aged 19 years, shot his brother Roger, aged 8, in the back of the head, but the child may recover.

The convention of the Eagles at New Albany was attended by delegates from ninety-seven aeries in the State. A trolley ride, a street parade and a sunset excursion on the river were the social features.

Mystery surrounds the death of Chas. Klaubmeier, a well-known labor union man of Evansville. He died of lockjaw and the attending physician thinks it might have been brought on by poison. Coroner Edward Lavall is making an investigation.

Rev. P. Roche, of Fort Wayne, rector of the Cathedral, has forcefully and publicly scored the parents who permit their daughters to go out alone at night without knowing their whereabouts. He declares the parents are responsible for the downfall of the girls.

According to a report that has just been completed by J. F. Peetz, State statistician, Decatur has the highest tax rate of any city or town in the State. Aside from the poll tax the total is $4.40 on the $100. A large number of the towns and cities run close to this mark but none exceeds it.

John Mullen, of Darlington, the man who saved Coroner Ivory Tolly, of Lebanon, at Darlington, May 1st, will not get a Carnegie medal, because it appears that his own life was not endangered from drowning in Sugar creek, by his act of bravery. However, the agent who investigated the case said that when Mr. Mullen's four children reach the proper age, Mr. Carnegie will see that each one of them gets a college education to the value of $500.

In order to make their franchise good, the Fort Wayne & Springfield interurban line has been running cars from the southern corporation line of Decatur for the last two days. The franchise granted by the City Council was to the effect that cars must run through the city yby the 1st of July, but as the extension of the line has been completed to the southern corporation line the company will within a few days be running cars on a regular schedule.

About two hundred Masons and members of the Order of the Eastern Star of Fortville gathered at the home of Harvey Cauldwell, a retired merchant and wealthy land owner of McCordsville, to pay tribute of esteem to him for his fifty-six years' devoted service to the order. Members of the fraternity were there from Oaklandon, Pendleton, Fortville, Knightstown, Greenfield and Indianapolis. Several addresses were made and refreshments were served.

Prosecutor Elmer E. Hastings, of Washington, has appointed Miss Delpha Robinson, formerly of Jasonville, deputy prosecutor at Shoals. Miss Robinson has had several years' experience as an attorney and is strongly opposed to violation of the liquor laws. Mr. Hastings gives as his reason for appointing Miss Robinson that there are many violations of the liquor laws in that part of his district and that the temperance people say the deputies have not been active enough.

The Factory Promoting Club of Brazil sold the last two lots in the Oak Park addition, which raises the factory fund to $144,000, in addition to the $45,000 raised sixty days ago. The successful sale of these lots gets the large plant of the Knight-Brunkenhoff Piano Company, of Charlotte, Mich., a ware company, involving a half million dollars, and the new plant of the American Sewer Pipe Company, costing $100,000. Work on the new factories will be started next week.

A party was given at the home of Miss Pink Likens, near Jasonville. About twenty-five young women and as many young men were present. All were dressed as children. The young men wore short trousers and wide collar shirts and represented the small boys of today, while the young women wore girl's dresses. The evening was spent in children's games, dropping the handkerchief, dressing dolls and playing with little wagons and marbles. Each guest spoke "a piece" or sang a song.

Charlie Carson, of Jacksonville, a truck farmer, took his gun into his corn field a few days ago to shoot crows and while returning home shot a hawk sitting on its nest and also dislodged the nest, which floated gently to the ground. In it was one unbroken egg which was almost ready to hatch. Mr. Carson placed the egg under a hen that was hatching. In a short time he heard the old hen sounding notes of warning. On investigation he found she was making war with her beak on the hawk egg, and was pecking it to pieces. The hen's instinct warned her not to hatch an enemy.

Miss Lillian Brizius, of Evansville, 16 years old, ended her life by jumping into a cistern. It is believed she was despondent over a love affair.

Crawford Fairbanks became sole owner of the Terre Haute House and Grand Opera House block. Mr. Fairbanks had been negotiating some time with the former operators of the hostelry, the Watson-Beggs Company. He intends building one of the most up-to-date hotels in the State. The consideration was not announced.

Clad only in a night dress, Mrs. Frances E. Beechey, wife of Dr. P. W. Beechey, of Indianapolis, committed suicide by throwing herself in front of a Pennsylvania line "owl" car. The woman had been in poor health and her mind was unbalanced.

Mrs. Polly Weed Shipperd, of Newburg, who recently was married to her ninth husband, attended Memorial Day services at Newburg. While leaning on the arm of her new husband she visited the graves of most of her former husbands and decorated them with flowers.

BUTLER, INDIANA, FRIDAY, JUNE 18, 1909

"A Most Sacred Duty"

PRESIDENT TAFT, at Charlotte, on May 20, gave a foreword of his policy in filling vacancies in the United States supreme court by commending the policy of former President Harrison. The last president of the United States gave many forewords and hindwords; in fact, he was forever talking about the cogrt, but we do not find that anything very good or very bad came of that talk.

We have come to look with some fear upon presidential promises made in public speeches. They resemble over much the practice of minor officers who talk to detract the public mind from what they are really doing. President Taft will find a splendid opportunity to aid the people in his selection of United States judges. At this period in the nation's progress the common citizen has many vital interests hinging on the decisions of the supreme court, and Mr. Taft has spoken well in declaring that appointments to that court constitute "a most sacred duty."

Not Entitled to Honors

HOW is a man's democracy to be determined? Of course a man can for his own satisfaction call himself a democrat and yet support the republican ticket at every opportunity. While no one can legally deprive him of the satisfaction he obtains from the use of the party name, he is certainly not entitled to receive the honors that come with party service. A law requiring bi-partisan appointments is a farce if it permits the appointment of men who represent the minority in name only. Since 1896, the democratic party has suffered a great deal by the appointment of so-called democrats on bi-partisan boards, but in nearly every case the so-called democrats are as anti-democratic as their republican associates. Where republican officials reward the democrats for their apostacy they not only deprive the democratic party of representation, but make it responsible for those who are neither in the party nor of the party.—The Commoner.

AMERICANS generally, irrespective of party, will commend the course of the secretary of the navy, who has instructed the surgeon general to conduct a vigorous inquiry into the conditions attending the physical well-being of the midshipmen at Annapolis. As Mr. Meyer has well said, the revelations of the last two years in this regard are nothing short of appalling. The graduating class this year consisted of a hundred and eighty men who passed their mental examinations. When, however, they were subjected to the physical examination prescribed by the regulations, forty-three were rejected. The chief causes of rejection were defective eye-sight or a pathological condition of the valves of the heart. These young men, it will be remembered, were subjected to the most searching physical examination before their admission to the academy, four years ago. At that time they were pronounced absolutely sound in every respect. During the intervening period they have lived under presumably ideal conditions and yet one out of every four is now found physically incapacitated for service in the navy. Were similar facts to become known of any private or semi-private educational institution in the country it would mean its ruination. Of course the advantages presented by an education at Annapolis and the commission which follows successful examination will prevent the academy being eschewed by young men and their parents, but such conditions present a grave question to those responsible for the well being of the navy entirely apart from the humanitarian question involved. If one-fourth of the men who are graduated are found physically incapacitated when they have concluded their four years term, is it not a reasonable assumption that of the remainder a considerable number may far have depleted their physical stamina as to necessitate their retirement for physical disability within the next few years? The survival of the fittest has always been the motto of the naval academy, but it is a grave question if that policy has not been carried to a point which renders it equivalent to the undermining of the fit.

THE following from the Journal-Gazette hits Butler's case to a standstill and is worthy of reproduction: The Hon. S. M. Foster, one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the "civic revival," in talking of the meetings to be held this week yesterday stated that the meetings will afford Fort Wayne people a grand opportunity of demonstrating the sincerity of their contentions for an improvement of civic conditions. In this relation Mr. Foster had the following to say: "The interest which we shall all take in the approaching 'civic revival' will be a pretty good test of our patriotism and public spirit. We are all given to loud protestations of a desire to 'see things done' in Fort Wayne. We take every opportunity to proclaim our loyalty to our home city and to urge that this, that and the other thing be done. We have been prone to carp and criticise and to roll as a sweet morsel under our tongue every unfavorable thing that could be said concerning the city in which our lot has been cast. This civic revival comes as a blast of Gabriel's horn. It's a trumpet call to all of us to wake up, to quit knocking and begin boosting. Its a call to make good on all that we have long been preaching and claiming. The time has come when its 'put up or shut up.' Let's put up—not shut up. Let's put up our time, our influence and our enthusiasm. We have long needed something to pull us all together and at which we might all pull together. I believe it is coming to us in this general uprising in an effort to awaken ourselves to the possibilities that lie before us right here in Fort Wayne."

Aldrich's Easy Task

Some of the republican papers are giving Mr. Aldrich credit for great ability in the management of the tariff discussion, but it must be remembered that Mr Aldrich's task is made easy by the fact that he is the representative of "the system" and has all the assistants that he needs. If the readers will pardon the illustration, Mr. Aldrich's position is something like the position of the shepherd on the western plains who has a number of sheep-dogs to assist him. The dogs round up any sheep that show signs of waywardness, and thus save the shepherd many steps. So with Mr. Aldrich. The trust representatives are his faithful assistants and line up such senators and congressmen as are responsive to the call of the trusts. The votes that have been cast in congress indicate that the trust representatives have been neither asleep nor inactive. The "pressure" that they bring to bear on the legislators relieves Mr. Aldrich of a great deal of labor. If Mr. Aldrich relied upon his argument or upon personal influence, he would not get very far in the tariff fight, but with the trusts behind him to threaten obstreperous congressmen and to hold out promises of influence and campaign funds, he is able to continue his march toward a high tariff victory. When the people decide to send senators and members who will guard the interests of all the people instead of listening to the demands of a few, Mr. Aldrich will be as powerless as the tariff reformers are now.

Stafford and East Wilmington

Use Butler flour.

Sarah Imhoff is reported on the sick list. Her health has not been good for several months.

Peter Bechtel is selling sand from his sand pit again. As the townships have ceased to sell sand or gravel from their pit it makes a demand for it from private pits, it seems.

Joseph Boolick has sold his little farm to a Mr. Laub who will take possession of it next fall.

T. L Strole has improved his farm lately by making a new wagon shed and corn crib.

A new up-to-date barn is being built on the Mutzfeld farm about one mile east of Butler.

A house on the farm formerly owned by Warren Webster is being enlarged, improved and repaired extensively.

Last Sunday some campers stayed over the day on the farm of C. Steckley in his wood lot near Gypsy hill.

Some of our people attended the Sunday school convention in the Christian church at Newville last Sunday.

We hear that Peter Bechtel has hired a young man from Ohio by the name of Scott to work for him and to fill the place of the hand who recently left him.

Isaac Shafer and wife, of Bryan, Ohio, came last Saturday to visit his son, John, and other relatives in Stafford and Wilmington townships for a few days.

Willis Wilson, who sells Dr. Drake's medicines and who lives at Auburn, stayed Monday night at the home of his father, Joseph Wilson.

Some farmers are selling the remainder of their old wheat thinking the price will be lower soon as the new wheat is likely to be a better crop than it was expected to be earlier in the season.

Samuel Miller and wife, of Butler, have moved back on their farm in Stafford township and their son in-law, Charles Discher and wife, who came last winter to farm for their father, have moved back to Chicago. Farm work and life in the country, it seems, was too great a change for Mr. Discher. Although Mr. Miller has a fine home in the country, life on the farm again will be a great change to him and Mrs. Miller, especially to the latter.

Farmers are beginning to work their corn and, late as it is, there is some to be planted yet and much to replant.

Potatoes in many fields look well, and there seems to be a fair prospect for a good crop this season.

Will Craun has begun to gather his strawberries. The crop will not be up to the average this year and the price, on this account, will be more than some years.

A man who lives in the south part of Stafford says that an insect has appeared in the vicinity of Newville which annoys people greatly. It is claimed by some that it is the insect known in "the south" as giggers. What next? Is it possible that the San Francisco earthquake did really move us, as claimed by a scientist, two hundred and fifty miles farther south?

According to the report of the Whitley county assessor to the board of review, the increased valuation of the county for the year is $202,661.

Earl W. Oberst was struck by No. 16 on the Lake Shore at Waterloo Saturday night. He was standing on the platform too close to the tracks, and failed to see the east bound train. The engine struck him on the head rendering him unconscious. Sunday morning he was removed to St. Joe hospital at Fort Wayne where he was operated upon to lift a fracture from the skull He is in a very serious condition, although some hopes are entertained for his recovery. He is a student at Tri-State college, Angola, and was working his way through the institution by canvassing. Prof. Fairfield came from Angola and accompanied the young man to the hospital. The operation Sunday was of such a nature that a silver plate had to be inserted. A second operation was performed Tuesday, but it is thought he cannot recover.

"I will not," replied Senator Gore, "I will not betray the farmers of the United States with the Judas kiss—the duty on corn is such a sham and humbug that no man who believed in it ought to be allowed to run at large outside the United States senate."

So light running
that your "youngest" can now mow the lawn
without help.

KEEN KUTTER Mowers are fast cutting and easy running because of the triple gear and the fine ball bearings. A KEEN KUTTER will last longer than any mower on the market and is easily kept keen and sharp. To sharpen, merely reverse the blades and they sharpen themselves. A cheap mower will cost more in the end on account of repairs, will not do the work properly and will require twice as much labor.

The KEEN KUTTER is a money saver, a time saver, a temper saver—and will keep your lawn looking like velvet.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Charles E. Mercer has signified his intention of applying to the county commissioners for a license to conduct a saloon in Corunna, Richland township, this county. This is the first attempt to secure a liquor license since the county was made dry by remonstrance.

General John S. Kountz, of Toledo, at one time commander of the national G. A. R. died at his home in that city Monday morning. He is well remembered by many of the veterans in this vicinity. He was famous as the "Drummer Boy of Missionary Ridge," in which engagement he lost a leg. He also wore a medal awarded to him for bravery in battle.

A traveling salesman died very suddenly in Pittsburg. His relatives telegraphed the undertaker to make a wreath; the ribbon should be extra wide, with the inscription "Rest in Peace" on both sides, and if there is room, "We Shall Meet in Heaven." The undertaker was out of town, and his new assistant handled the job. It was a startling floral piece which turned up at the funeral. The ribbon was extra wide and bore the inscription, "Rest in Peace on Both Sides, and if there is Room We Shall Meet in Heaven."

The badly decomposed body of Richard McCormick, the Roanoke stave manufacturer, who was last seen on the streets of Roanoke last Wednesday night after he had spent the day in Fort Wayne, was pulled out of the muddy waters of Cow creek, just west of Roanoke at 6 o'clock Sunday morning, after the entire neighborhood had turned out in a two days' discouraging search for the missing man. The Huntington county coroner viewed the body, which was then prepared for burial and was sent through Fort Wayne over the Nickel Plate for the unfortunate man's home at Payne, Ohio, where the funeral and burial was held.

Sam Noragon, wife and daughter and two daughter-in-laws took an auto trip out in the country Saturday to the farm home of John Kiplinger and wife. They had the pleasure of walking through Mrs. Kiplinger's lovely flower garden and gathered fragrant blossoms for the Children's meeting at the M. E. church. Mrs. Kiplinger had 300 white paeonia blossoms, besides lillies, iris, pinks, columbine, buttercups, wegalia, syringia, verbena, pink and red paeonias to select from. They also saw the grave of the old family dog Fanny, which they raised from a pup and lived to be twenty years old. They buried her in the flower garden with a head mark at grave and all cemented over. The guests were entertained with graphophone music and had a delightful time.

The election in LaGrange county last Tuesday resulted in a narrow majority for the drys. It was a close call for the temperance agitators and they are now trying to explain the reasons. After four years of rigid enforcement of the anti-liquor legislation, the making of the county dry by remonstrance and an organized effort upon the part of the political push that controls the county, to keep it dry, the people without an organization nearly upset things in the so-called rock-ribbed temperance community. It is safe to say that had the anti-optionists had any organization or the outside help that came to the temperance forces, the result would have been different. It shows one thing, and that conclusively, that a large part of the voting population of LaGrange are protesting against conditions that now obtain in that county. It shows that the protest is general and not confined to any part of the county, and this after several years of enforced prohibition. We were told last week by a well-known temperance leader that the majority for the drys in LaGrange county would be anywhere over a thousand and he even predicted that it would be as high as fifteen hundred. He said that the people of LaGrange had tried prohibition and that they liked it so well that there was no opposition. But, his most significant remark was that every politician that ever wanted anything was outspoken in his alliance with the drys and that no man of prominence dared to oppose them or give encouragement to the wets. With all of these advantages, the organization, the support of the newspapers, the narrow majority must be discouraging to the men who propose to force their ideas upon the people of LaGrange county at any cost.—Ligonier Banner.

Mrs. Joe Rich, age thirty nine, committed suicide at Ladoga, Ind., by drinking carbolic acid. It was the sixteenth anniversary of her marriage. The woman was evidently determined to die, as a loaded revolver was found near her. Nathan Freeman, a wealthy farmer and the father of Mrs. Rich, made a division of his property a few months ago, and in a note found on her person Mrs. Rich said that on account of not being treated fairly in the division she decided to end her life. Mrs. Rice has grieved since her father disposed of his property, as she did not share equally with the other children. A husband survives. The family is one of prominence.

The lifeless body of George Zimmermann, aged 67 years, known as a prominent farmer of Springfield township, Allen county, was found hanging on a rope from a rafter in the wagon shed on the farm of a son, three and one-half miles east of Harlan Sunday morning. The aged man had been suffering for some time from nervous trouble and several times within the past week had threatened to take his life. It is supposed that Zimmermann went to the shed and tied the rope around his neck on Saturday evening as there was no one at home at that time, the wife being away on a visit with another daughter and the son and the latter's wife, with whom he lived being in Maysville. When the son returned home Saturday evening and did not find his father, he supposed the latter had gone to join the mother. Mrs. Zimmermann returned home on Sunday morning, however, without her husband and then the search was begun which ended in his being found in the shed. Zimmermann was well-known in the vicinity in which he lived and was reputed to be wealthy. The wife and four children survive him.

The Sundays of June 27 and July 4, will be of special importance to Methodism within the bounds of the North Indiana Conference. In every church the Home for the Aged will be the theme of appropriate sermon and special song; all of which will be significant in behalf of the movement founding the Home. It is expected soon to erect the main building and at an early day the Home will be carrying out its beneficient purposes. It is a matter of gratitude that this worthy institution is so near the realization of its promoters and it will be, in its active operations, a source of genuine pleasure, that this Home gives expression to a distinctively, Christian philanthrophy; a philanthropy that makes it appeal to, and has its rightful claim upon, the benevolence of all who sympathize with the worthy dependent aged. The active work of the Home will redeem the church from the oft repeated charge that her aged are often the subjects of neglect. This general observance in behalf of the Home will be productive of enlarged interest, and will bring to it the positive encouragement of the entire conference. Indiana Methodism has two great institutions in operation, one each within the bounds of the Northwest and the Indiana conferences, respectively. The establishment of this Home for the Aged at Warren within the bounds of the North Indiana conference gives to each of the three Methodist conferences of the state a representative institution—one for education, one for healing and this for the care of the dependent aged. The North Indiana conference will do itself worthy honor in planting this Home on a basis of largest service in this department of Christian activity.

While it now looks as though United States Senator Isidor Rayner, of Maryland, will have no competion in the democratic primaries for renomination, the honor will be very costly. The old settlers' of LaGrange county held their annual reunion Friday and enjoyed a fine time. Speeches were made by O. L. Ballou and J. S Drake. John Smith received the loving cup as the oldest continuous resident in the county, having been a resident since 1833. The oldest continuous taxpayer was William Olney, of VanBuren township. He has paid taxes in the county sixty-four years. Jonas Kauffman received third prize for being the oldest person present from the township, having the largest delegation. He is eighty-four years of age.

The Pennsylvania company announces that hereafter its officers will give to the public, through the newspapers, prompt and accurate information concerning any accidents which may occur on its lines. This is a movement in the right direction, only there are some strings to it which will prevent small papers from getting the information until after the large ones print it. The information is to be given out only at its general offices and at offices of division superintendents. No information will be given out by other employes. Railroad companies object to their employes giving out information for the reason that what they say is not always reliable, and for that reason causes trouble.—Columbia City Post.

The "suckerbug" is the latest affliction on the community. When one of these insects stings a person it has the remarkable effect of causing the victim to hunt up his last year's fish pole, dig a can of angle worms and stampede for the creek, where he sits on the bank and tortures the worms by impaling them on a barbed hook and then trying to drown them in the creek. Sometimes the victim will sit on the bank or up and down the stream for hours, while the fever which follows the sting of the suckerbug gradually oozes out through his toes. In some instances the denizens of the deep gobble up the worms which the fellow is trying to drown in the creek and then the "fever" causes him to yank the poor suckers or chubs out high and dry on land. Constant repetition of this performance serves in the course of a few hours as a cure (for the day) of the sting of this audacious bug and the victim reaches the last stage of the disease when he measures off to his friends the next day and says "every one of 'em was so long."

No doubt many of our readers will be interested in this: W. H. Whittaker, general superintendent of the Indiana reformatory, has had prepared statistical tables showing the results of the parole system for the twelve years of the institution, and the indeterminate sentence law, from April 1, 1897, to March 31, 1909. In the twelve years there have been paroled 2,745 inmates from the reformatory. Of these 703 were returned as "unsatisfactory cases." The term "unsatisfactory" is applied to all who have violated parole of the terms of suspended sentence and been returned or committed to the reformatory. It also includes those who are delinquent and one who escaped after being returned for violated parole. The figures show that in the gress 1,743 have been finally discharged without recommitment; 433 are reporting; 54 have died; 430 are delinquent.

The evidence and the arguments in the case before the county commissioners to change the boundary line between Concord and Spencer townships, established by the commissioners several days, ago, were finished late Thursday afternoon and the commissioners announced that they would render a decision in the case Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Interest centered in what this decision would be and many of the residents of the two townships were in the city Thursday to hear what it would be. The case was one which was hotly contested on both sides and in which a great amount of feeling has been thrown by the parties. The two opposing attorneys were J. E. Pomeroy and P. V. Hoffman, the latter appearing for the parties who desire the boundary line changed. At 3 o'clock on Friday afternoon when the commissioners reassembled the auditor's room was crowded. Both attorneys resumed a running argument and finally the commissioners gave their decision, which was unanimously in allowing the boundary line to remain as it is, that is as established a few days ago.—Courier.

LONG LOST JOHN ORTH IS NOW FOUND IN OHIO

Chicago Journal Claims to Have Unearthed Missing Archduke of Austria.

HAD WORKED AS A MACHINIST

Drifted All Over the World—Lost His Wife and Children in Pelee Eruption.

Stranger than fiction is the story unearthed by the Chicago Journal in which a poor machinist at Painesville, O., under the supposed assumed name of John Orth, is said to be none other than Archduke Johann, head of the proud house of Hapsburg, nephew of Franz Josef, and missing heir to the throne of Austria, who disappeared nineteen years ago after marrying Ludmilli Stubel, an opera singer. The pictures accompanying this article are reproduced from the Chicago Journal, and briefly sketched, the Journal story is:

John Orth was discovered at Painesville, Ohio, working as a machinist at $16 a week. Previously he had followed this occupation at Grand Rapids, Mich., and Cleveland, Ohio. His reasons for making his identity known at this time, the Journal states, are his advancing age and his desire that he be buried in Austria.

Johann Salvator, as the alleged archduke has always been known since he left the court at Vienna, was married in London, and he and his wife afterwards sailed to South America in the Santa Margarita, a schooner that he had chartered. It has always been believed that the archduke lost his life when the schooner sank off the coast of Chile.

According to the story of the Painesville machinist, he and his beautiful wife were not aboard the ship, as was generally thought to have been the case. They went ashore at Cusavana, a small port on the Rio de la Plata. It was planned that they meet the ship at Valparaiso, but the craft sank en route.

The romantic couple drifted all over the world, finally taking up a plantation on the island of Martinique. When the first rumblings of Mt. Pelee gave warning of the catastrophe that followed soon afterward, Johann Salvator made a hurried visit to the city to arrange to get his family away. But the warning had come too late. His wife and their two children were killed.

Salvator, according to the Journal story, was rescued by a French gunboat and came to the United States.

How Orth Was Found.

The Chicago Journal some time ago printed a series of world mysteries, including the disappearance of Johann Salvator. The marriage of the archduke was referred to as "Morganatic." Soon after a letter was received from Painesville protesting against the reference to the marriage and declaring that it was legal. The letter was written in such a manner as to indicate the writer knew more than the ordinary person about the affairs of the missing archduke. An investigation followed, revealing the strange story.

John Orth, at Painesville, was found to closely resemble the accepted photographs of Franz Josef. He did not admit he was the missing archduke, but he did confess to a strange story of adventures in Chile, Argentine, Salvator, Japan and Central America between the dates of Johann Salvator's disappearance in Austria, and when John Orth, machinist, was interviewed at Painesville.

At Painesville, where he worked as a mechanic, he confided to his foreman that he was the fugitive archduke. His every act bore out his statement. He told his foreman's children stores of court life. He related incidents that a son looked up and found historically correct. He told of a nobleman who, like himself, contracted a marriage with a woman beneath his rank. That nobleman was thrown into prison. Salvator also feared that he might be imprisoned, especially since he had criticised Austrian military management to the degree that he fell into disfavor with his government. That is why he has concealed himself. He is afraid of punishment, he has said.

Rudolph a Suicide.

Shortly after Johann Salvator became plain John Orth, a man without a country, Crown Prince Rudolph, heir apparent to Franz Josef, committed suicide. Johann Salvator was next in line. He would have been Franz Josef's successor.

But he was out of the way, no longer even an Austrian citizen, and Archduke Charles Louis was next in line. Louis waived his right in favor of his heir, Francis Ferdinand. And when Franz Josef was near death about a year ago the question of whether the united empire would accept Francis Ferdinand was the greatest question in European politics. Diplomats feared he never could hold the countries together. They feared civil war, and a strife that would involve others of the powers.

Francis Ferdinand's future has been uncertain. His chance to mount Austro-Hungary's throne in peace would be doubly jeopardized by the return of a man who at least, whether or not his citizenship was ever restored, could be used as a pretender by Ferdinand's enemies.

The True Story.

One summer day in 1886, an humble Vienna citizen, Herr Stubel, took his wife and three daughters to picnic in the woods near the city. They helped swell the family purse by singing in the Royal opera house, and the father had shut up his little shop before noon and taken them to enjoy the open.

They had just spread their luncheon. Milli, the youngest girl, who earned her mite by dancing, pirouetted about in her glee to be outdoors. Suddenly she dropped, frightened. A shot had whistled by from an inclosure in the woods. A handsome, soldierly-looking man in hunter's costume appeared. He was earnest in his apologies. Hospitable Herr Stubel invited him to stay for the luncheon.

The man stayed, entered into the simple spirit of the little home party. His dress had the distinguished cut of the nobleman. His whiskers and mustache betokened a man of rank. But his brown eyes were so kindly and his manners so unaffected that no one suspected he was other than the engineer, John Orth, whom he introduced himself to be. Herr Stubel might have noticed how much those eyes looked in the direction of Milli. Also a change in the girl. Never before had her eyes seemed so full of light, the smile of her pretty lips so sweet. She looked like a nymph of the woods. When the day was over Orth asked if he might come to visit the family in their home. Herr Stubel consented. It was the beginning of a romance.

Herr Johann Orth often visited the opera to watch his little sweetheart sing and dance. He told her, more and more insistently, that she should leave the stage and go away, with him—away from the world somewhere, just the two of them for always. And while the girl listened half-convinced, new forces were working. Milli's mother somehow got suspicious that Johann Orth was not the man he pretended to be. He had asked the girl to address him at Gmunden. The mother could find no man there of that name.

The Surprise Came.

The big army corps was having grand maneuvers near Gmunden. It was the big spectacular event of the year. The emperor himself would review the troops. Grand dukes would lead them. The mother and daughter got places where they could see anything. At the head of an entire army corps rode a man in the imperial trappings and decorations—an archduke whom all bowed before. The little singer took one look at him and fainted. It was her lover, Johann Orth. Her house of cards had fallen with a crash. This was no man of her own station who honorably loved her. It was only another great nobleman playing with a poor girl's heart, only amusing himself.

But a miracle happened. The great man, this archduke and nephew of Franz Josef, in the presence of the whole army and its officers, hurried to the spot and raised the girl up, and took her to his palace. "I want you for always," he murmured. "They won't ever separate us no matter what happens. I am going to marry you, in spite of the whole world."

He took Milli to London and married her in the presence of her father and mother. He had to give up his title to the throne. He had to renounce even his Austrian citizenship. Then he and the girl he loved disappeared from the knowledge of man.

This is the true story of Archduke Johann's romance. At Martinique it was learned his wife and two children were killed in the quake. Whether it was Milli Stubel, the peasant dancer, who died there, and whether John Orth is really Archduke Johann, only time may tell.

"JOHN ORTH," DECLARED TO BE ARCHDUKE JOHANN OF AUSTRIA.

BAD MEN AND THE LAW

With the passing of time has come the inevitable passing of the so-called "bad man" of the Western frontier. There are a few of them left who made reputations in the early days of the West, and among them is W. B. Masterson, better known as "Bat" Masterson, who achieved his reputation in the days when Dodge City was known as one of the wildest and most lawless towns in the West. It was Mr. Masterson who as sheriff transformed it into one of the most law-abiding cities in that district. Mr. Masterson, in an article in the Chicago Inter Ocean, deals with the men who made their reputations as "bad men" while acting within the law and on the side of the law, as he did himself.

I have had thirty-five years' experience on the plains, he writes. I have been an adventurer, sheriff, and owner of a Dodge City dance hall, where Eddie Foy, Bobby Gaylor and many other present-day actors of note worked for the amusement of the cow punchers. I have witnessed death in all its forms, and disorders generally. But when I say I never saw a gambler who was a bad man, either in the literal sense or the contracted form, I believe that I am stating an incontrovertible fact.

The gambler is the first business man on the ground. From the very nature of things he must be a worker for law and order. His bank roll, if nothing else, must be protected. There are varying views as to the morality of gambling, but I am only dealing with the condition of the frontier. The "bad man" did more toward implanting the law and making a soft couch for civilization in the Western country than any other—in fact, than all other forces combined.

Men that are characteristic of the type that gave this great Westland to the world are Buffalo Bill, Buckskin Sam, White Beaver, Broncho Bill, Captain Jack Crawford, Buck Taylor, Pawnee Bill, Arizona Charlie Meadows, Texas Jack, Wild Bill and Kit Carson, Jr. These were representative "bad men." Bad for the law breaker, the sluggard, the coward, the braggart—in fact, negative to any and all the influences that encouraged decay where moral growth was courted.

Consider the characteristics of some of these paradoxical bad men. There is White Beaver, whose name is Dr. Frank Powell, a practicing physician up to the time of his death a year ago in La Crosse, Wis. He did his work on the plains, and did it well. In the late '60s, when he was a surgeon in the Fifth United States Cavalry, he was known as the surgeon scout. He was a sure shot with the rifle and the revolver. Powell never sought trouble, but when once started in a fight he was the last man to quit. He came into his title in an odd way. Word reached the cavalry troop that smallpox had developed among the hostiles. Powell loaded himself with virus and boldly appeared at the Indian camp, a detachment of Winnebago Sioux which had taken to the warpath. He said to the chief: "Your medicine men are fools. They cannot cure your braves of the disease which is ravishing them. I have come to you, unarmed, and I offer my life at the stake if I do not stop the spread of the disease." The chief accepted the offer, and Powell vaccinated every man, woman and child in the tribe. Before he left the camp even the medicine men asked him to teach them the secret treatment.

One of the most picturesque characters that ever enlivened the plains was James B. Hickok, called Wild Bill. He was a mail rider at 12 years of age and killed a footpad who tried to hold him up. He had as many adventures as a historical novel hero. He met Jim Lane's band of jayhawkers and regulators and was admitted as a member after he had proved his ability by whipping three of their number. He was driver, boss wagoner and division manager for Russell, Waddells & Majors, government freighters to the Rockies. Bill was also a scout, a stage driver and a marshal. He did the biggest thing in the way of individual achievement I know of. When he was driving stage and had put up for the night in a cabin he was attacked by Big Lanigan and his gang in the streets of Hays City, Kan., who had sworn to have his life. Bill was terribly hurt in the encounter, but he killed two and crippled another. Bill was murdered in a Deadwood saloon by a man named McCaul.

Western Kansas, Nebraska, the Panhandle of Texas and the neighboring country has its "bad men" to-day, but instead of fighting for rights at revolver points, they are reaping civilization's harvest on the largest farms in the world and the greatest cattle ranches that exist. The same broad spirit conceives and operates these gigantic gardens that fought for law and order thirty years ago.

It must not be supposed that the average tenderfoot who came out in the West in the early days was always a coward. One day a pale-looking, thin and sickly young man alighted from the train and put up at the little adobe hotel at Durango, Colo. The tenderfoot walked up to the bar and called for a bottle of soda pop. "Tain't allowed to drink that sort o' stuff out here," said a toughy. "What you want is a stiff drink of red liquor; Mr. Barkeep, set out the pison for this young fellow." "You have the best of me," replied the tenderfoot, "and I'll have to drink the stuff, but I hope the time may come when I can make you drink my choice of liquid." The tenderfoot raised the glass and gulped down the whisky. Sandy had had his way about it, and he made no effort to comprehend the vague remark of the stranger.

The tenderfoot left for a ranch down the Pecos the next day after the incident in the saloon and he was forgotten until one afternoon more than a year afterward a strong, healthy-looking young man rode up to the hotel on a broncho, dropped the bridle reins upon the ground and dismounted. He had the appearance of a typical young man of the range. His face was bronzed and his eyes clear and penetrating. "I owe a fellow a debt which I believe I will pay right now," the stranger remarked. No sooner had he made the remark than he walked off in the direction of Sandy, who had a gun in his right hand and was firing it into the air at every few steps. The stranger approached Sandy, pulled his gun and unceremoniously dragged the bully up to the saloon and led him in that fashion up to the bar. "Get me a pan of water and set it upon the floor," he said to the barkeeper. The order was complied with, Sandy standing there meekly, wondering what was going to happen to him. "Now get down on the floor and drink water out of that pan like a dog," the former tenderfoot ordered. Sandy at first refused, but when the stranger began twirling his gun around on his forefinger and said the order must be obeyed the cowed fellow unlimbered and lay down upon the floor and began drinking water out of the pan.

HORNED TO A WALL BUTCHER SHOOTS MAD STEER.

Pinned against a wall by a maddened steer, Charles Seaman, of Columbia, Pa., saved his life by shooting the animal. Seaman, who is a butcher, had intended to shoot the steer anyway. As he raised a rifle the beast charged upon him. One horn struck the left side of his face, plowed a furrow through the flesh and forced Seaman's head fast to the side of the building. While in this position he placed the muzzle of the rifle against the animal's neck, fired and the steer fell dead. Seaman's jaw was dislocated and his face and head badly lacerated.

TWO BROTHERS WED EACH OTHER'S DIVORCED WIVES.

Families Tangled Up Inextricably by Curious Relation of Which Neither Was Aware.

When H. P. Hull was called from Denver to Norfolk, Neb., to attend his brother's funeral, he made the discovery that the widow of his brother, Phillip Hull, was the wife whom he had divorced some time previously.

Then it came the time of the widow-divorcee to make a discovery. She learned that the wife of her first husband, H. P. Hull, was also the divorced wife of her late husband, Phillip, in other words, that each of the brothers had been divorced and that each had married the other's divorced wife, although none of the four parties to the transaction was aware of the fact.

Each divorce has been contested. Phillip Hull was divorced from his first wife at Norfolk in 1906 and Anna E. Hull, who later became his wife, was divorced from H. P. Hull in 1907. As far as can be ascertained, each brother was totally ignorant of the fact that his wife was his brother's former wife.

A FIFTY YEAR OLD FIRE.

Great Efforts to Save a Burning Pennsylvania Coal Mine.

Determined efforts are now being made to extinguish a fire that for fifty-one years has been raging in the bowels of the earth at Summit Hill, near Mauch Chunk, Pa., and which during that period has licked up many thousands of tons of coal. It was fifty-one years ago that the fire broke out—how has never been determined. Lack of men and lack of means prevented a proper fighting of the fire when it started. The shaft in which it originated led into a mine which had been worked for more than eighty years, and which contained great quantities of refuse coal. This furnished it ready fuel and the fire was soon beyond control.

Efforts have been made from time to time to extinguish the fire, but unsuccessfully. In 1862 the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, the owners, undertook to make an open cut through the hill to block off the fire. An excavation of 2,000 feet was made in the earth. For some unknown reason the work was abandoned; the fire came up to the cut, swerved aside and blithely pursued its way.

Sixteen years ago they began drilling boreholes into the earth. They sank holes until they struck cracks or open shafts, when they poured into the mine tons of refuse and water or wet clay. The purpose was to block the fire by walls of this waste material. Into 600 to 700 holes were poured thousands of tons of "gob" or slush. Some required as many as 8,000 tons of waste matter. But the fire crept around these impeding walls and burned on. At last the company realized that because of the irregularity of the vein this method could not prove successful. Then it evolved the scheme, which it believes will finally block the fire.

The new play means the making of a solid wall of clay or concrete in the mine up to which the fire will burn, when it will perforce have to die out. This undertaking, it is said, will cost more than $1,000,000. Beginning at the top of a hill more than a mile from Summit Hill, six shafts are being sunk into the earth. At the top of the hill an open cut, 100 feet long and 12 feet wide, is being made in the earth. It will be excavated until the coal vein is reached. Then all the coal at that point will be removed. Two other cuts being dug are 20 feet long by 12 feet wide; the other three are 50 feet long by 12 feet in width. All are dug 50 feet apart and will be excavated to the coal vein, probably to a depth of 200 feet.

When the coal vein is reached men will begin taking out the coal beneath the shaft and tunneling it under the intervening ground between the shafts. When all the coal is removed the excavation will be filled, either with clay or a composition of concrete, which will form a thick and solid wall in the mine.

POURS OIL IN THE STOVE.

Mrs. L. H. Everhart, wife of a farmer living one and one-half miles north of Sedalia, Mo., and her 7-year-old daughter were killed at their home by a simultaneous explosion of a gallon of coal oil and a stick of dynamite. Mrs. Everhart was preparing to start a fire in the kitchen stove and as it did not burn quickly she took the can of oil and started to throw some into the stove. Instantly the oil exploded and with it the stick of dynamite that was lying on top of a cupboard in the kitchen. The entire side of the house was blown away. An infant in a room adjoining the kitchen escaped unharmed.

BAD PARROT A PRISONER.

Profane Bird Hauled Out of a Tree by a Policeman and Arrested.

Charged with resisting an officer, using profane language, being a disorderly person, causing a crowd to collect, trespassing on park lands prohibited by law, and being disrespectful to a policeman without cause, a parrot is a prisoner in the offices of the Essex County Park Commission in Newark waiting for its owner to square things with the authorities, according to the New York Times.

When Sergeant Wilson passed a tree in Branch Brook Park he noticed a crowd gathered around the foot of it. He hastened to the spot and was informed by a boy that some one was up in the branches "swearin' awful."

"Here, you, come down out of that," yelled Wilson. "You're violating the law."

"Oh, you bonehead! You hamfat!" came the answer from the new and thick foliage.

"I'll give you a minute to come down. Then I'll pull you down," said the angry sergeant!

"Robber! Help! Take him out! Bonehead! Strike one!" said the voice from the tree.

"He thinks he's at a baseball game," said one of the crowd.

"I'll go up and bring him down," said Sergeant Wilson, who was convinced by that time that he was dealing with a crazy baseball crank. The crowd admiringly watched him climb the tree, and looked at the commotion in the branches, there being sounds of deep breathing, imprecations, and struggles. In a few minutes the policeman reached earth somewhat rumpled, but triumphant, with an angry, profane parrot in his hands. The park commission is waiting for a man with an extensive baseball vernacular to lay claim to the bird.

Hardening of the Arteries.

"A man is as old as his arteries," was said some time ago by a French physician; and the saying, like so many others of the phrase-loving French, has a good deal of truth in it and not a little error.

There is many a man, old in years but young in spirit, whose arteries are like pipe-stems. So brittle do they seem, indeed, that the physician hardly dares feel the pulse, lest he crush the friable artery under his finger; yet these old people are active in mind and body, and seem often much younger than men of but two-thirds their years.

Again, one meets old and feeble folk whose lives seem to flicker dangerously, like a candle flame in a draft, whose arteries are as soft and compressive as those of a child.

In general, however, the saying is true, and especially in premature old age it will usually be found that the arteries are hard, with fibrous thickening, if not already more or less calcified. Hardening of the blood-vessels—arteriosclerosis is the accepted medical term—consists in a fibrous overgrowth of the walls of the arteries, usually following more or less degeneration of the normal tissues of the vessels. As to just how this comes about, physicians are not entirely agreed. It is probable that the change occurs first in the very minute vessels, those that run through the walls of the larger vessels supplying them with blood for their nourishment. When these are hardened by the deposit of fibrous tissue they carry less blood and carry it more slowly, and so the nutrition of the walls of the larger vessels is reduced. This leads to softening, and then Nature tries to repair the damage by the only new tissue at her hand—namely, fibrous tissue.

Later, these fibrous and thickened walls of the larger arteries may be hardened still more by a deposit of lime salts from the blood.

The arteriosclerosis so common in old age is the result of "wear and tear." An elastic tube dilated by hydraulic pressure and then contracting ten thousand times a day will have done much work by the end of seventy years. In younger life arteriosclerosis is most commonly caused by intemperance—not in drinking only, but in eating, especially meat-eating, without enough exercise to consume the excess of nutrient material. Overwork, worry and chronic poisoning, such as lead-poisoning, are also factors.

The best thing for arteriosclerosis is not to get it, and the best way not to get it is to be moderate in everything. People growing old should be examined medically every six months, and then incipient arteriosclerosis may be detected and perhaps arrested by proper diet, drugs and regimen.—Youth's Companion.

THE CHEWING-GUM GIRL.

She Sometimes May Spoil the Scene on the Tragic Stage.

Among the various types of our countrywomen which we admit as truly typical, perhaps that which the patriotic American is least able, and most desirous to be able to repudiate as libelous, is the chewing-gum girl.

Humorists and caricaturists have long held her up to ridicule; she plays her unlovely part unexaggerated in novels, tales and plays of contemporary life; distinguished travelers in serious studies of American manners spare her a paragraph or a page of amazement and dismay. She has little excuse indeed for not seeing herself as others see her; yet if she really did so see herself, it is impossible to believe that she would not cease to champ, and give rest to her weary jaws and to the eyes of the fascinated beholders.

Miss Ellen Terry has recently told a little tale which casts a further and a lurid light upon the subject.

During Irving's American production of "Faust," some six regularly employed actors of the company personated the leading demons of the famous scene of the witches' revel on the Brocken; the other forty imps and demons required were recruited from local talent in the different towns visited.

"Their general instructions," says Miss Terry, "were to throw up their arms and look fierce at certain music cues. One night I noticed a girl going through the most terrible contortions with her jaw, and thought I must say something.

"That's right, dear; very good, but don't exaggerate."

"How?" was all the answer that I got; and the girl continued to make faces as before.

"I was contemplating a second attempt when Templeton, the lime-light man, who had heard me speak to her, touched me on the shoulder.

"Beg pardon, miss, she don't mean it. She's only chewing gum."

At least, the offense, even if it result in grimaces hideous beyond the proper restraints of art, was not on that occasion, wholly out of keeping. But on another occasion, when the play was "King Arthur," Miss Terry's good friend, Madame Melba, who was in the audience, wrote her a note begging her move the stage manager to see that there should be no more gum chewing on the stage. The mourners, it appeared, walking in solemn procession behind the bier of Elaine, had chewed as they walked. Certainly the conjunction of ancient and modern maidenhood was a striking one: "Elaine, the fair, Elaine, the lovable, Elaine, the lily maid of Astolat"—and the chewing-gum girl!

FARMS AND FARMERS

Water for the Bees.

Give the bees plenty of water. They need a great deal and will fly a long distance to get it.

If there is no running stream or lake of pure water near it is well to place a pail of fresh water near the apiary every day.

Bees use water to dilute the heavy, thick honey left over from winter to make it suitable for the young larvae and also to make the cell wax pilable.

Bees should be protected from the wind on the north and west by a close-set hedge or high fence.

All the weeds should be kept down in front of the hives. Mow a plot 6 feet wide and then cut the weeds and grass close to the ground with a hoe.

An hour once a week spent on the care of the bees will bring larger returns for the effort than any other labor on the farm.

A newspaper man in Chicago, who lives a few miles out in the country, last year sold $225 worth of honey to three big hotels. He says he did not spend more than an hour a week looking after his bees during the season. —F. and D. Journal.

Feed for Chicks.

Feed chickens the first day or two upon a mixture of bread crumbs grated fine and hard-boiled egg chopped fine. Keep water before them in a small fountain, so they can drink but not get into it. In a few days feed upon rolled oats, finely cracked corn and any small seeds. Add a little beef scraps to the food. In the course of two weeks whole wheat can be given. This is the dry method of feeding, which is coming into vogue quite extensively. Here is another method of feeding: Mix dry two parts of corn meal, one part of finely ground wheat bran and one part of beef scraps. After they are thoroughly mixed add boiling water in sufficient quantity to make a stiff dough. Cover the vessel and let it cook. Feed the dough warm or cold, but never hot.—Denver Field and Farm.

Raising Pigs.

The cheapest way to put gains on young pigs is through the sow. She has a strong digestion and can turn coarse grains and pasture into easily digested milk. Careful experiments show that a pound of weight taken from the sow will make more than 1 pound of gain on the pigs, the flesh of the young animals containing more water. The sow should be fed to produce a high milk yield, and the pigs should be kept with her until they get to eating a full feed of grain and pasture.

Alfalfa in Kansas.

F. D. Coburn, secretary of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, says: "The alfalfa growing in Kansas approximates 900,000 acres, and but three cultivated crops exceed it in annual area, viz., wheat, corn and oats. In combination with these, alfalfa furnishes Kansans with the most complete and cheapest rations anywhere available, for the maintenance of live stock, for the excellence of which they are famed. It is a perennial blessing to those so fortunate as to have an area devoted to its growing."

Handling Geese.

In handling geese they should always be taken by the neck, and when lifted from the ground the body should be turned with the back toward the person handling it. In that position it cannot strike, and will remain quiet and docile. The body can be partly supported by seizing the first joint of the wing with one hand. If the goose is held facing one, it will strike hard blows with its wings or scratch with its feet.

Morgan Horses.

Forty years ago the Morgans were the favorite road horses. This strain traces to a single ancestor, Justin Morgan, foaled in Vermont in 1793, his blood being largely thoroughbred. From him descended the Blackhawk, Bashaw, Golddust, Ethan Allen, Ben Franklin and Gen. Knox and Daniel Lambert families. The Morgan type is short of leg, thick and round barrel, intelligent and of great courage and endurance.

Alfalfa Planting.

It should not be forgotten that the spring is the proper time to prepare the alfalfa crop that is to be planted next fall. The ground which is expected to be used for this crop should not be planted to small grain; neither should corn precede alfalfa, because the ground will not be kept free of weeds and grass. The best preparatory crop for alfalfa is cow peas; then after the vines are removed or plowed under the ground should be well broken and kept clean of weeds and grass by surface cultivation until it is seeded in alfalfa the following fall. Peanuts may be grown instead of cow peas, if the crop is considered more desirable, as it is perhaps, but they must be kept well cultivated and especially allow no earth grass to grow in the crop.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Cow Peas for Vineyards.

Cow peas are a good crop for vineyards. The grapes are given thorough cultivation until late June, when the cow peas are sown. Before this practice was begun, says the Farmers and Drovers' Journal, it was a problem to hold the soil about the roots of the vines. After cropping with cow peas for several seasons the land washes but little and the vines grow better and bear betterd. The cow peas make sufficient cover, so one does not get into the mud when pruning in wet weather in late winter or early spring. Whether grown in the orchard or vineyard the peas should usually be plowed under the following spring. In this way they protect the soil without losing any essential part of their fertilizing value.

DRAFT ON DOUBLETREE.

There is a difference of opinion regarding the pulling ability of each horse in a team. Some are of the opinion that the horse ahead is pulling the most, and vice versa.

The draft on each horse depends entirely on the relative lengths of the lever arms, and the lengths of the lever arms depend on the position of the clevis pins with respect to the draw pin. In upper diagram (1) the clevis pins and the draw pin are in a straight line, hence the lever arm is the perpendicular distance from the draw pin (A) to the line of draft of each horse. The lever arms in this case are A. B. and A. C., which are equal, no matter how much one horse is ahead of the other. One horse always pulls the same amount as the other.

In diagram (2) the clevis pins are behind the draw pin, and when one horse pulls ahead of the other his lever arm (A. C.) becomes longer and (A. B.) the lever arm of the one behind becomes shorter. In this case the horse ahead, having a large lever arm, has the advantage and pulls less than the one behind.

In diagram (3) the clevis pins are ahead of the draw pin, and when one horse pulls ahead his lever arm shortens and the lever arm of the one behind lengthens. The horse ahead, having the lever arm shorter, pulls more than the horse behind.

Value of a Small Stream.

An interesting example of the value of a small stream for light and power purposes may be found near Sacramento, Cal. A trout stream has been dammed up and the power in the form of electricity has been used for doing such light work as washing and ironing, also for cooking and lighting in the home of the owner. As the stream is very small during the dry months, an old miner's ditch has been dammed to form a reservoir of 100,000 cubic feet capacity. The plant cost $1,500 and in a single year has done $700 worth of work.

Transmitting Milk Qualities.

The influence of the male in transmitting milk qualities to his offspring is a point in which dairymen give too little heed. Who is there but has not been disappointed in his heifers from his best cows by the use of some unworthy bull, or, if he has been so fortunate as to secure a bull of some extra milking strain, has not found his heifers from cows good or bad excelling their dams in yield and quality of milk? Look well to the bull, for in his choice lies success or failure.—Kansas Farmer.

Portable Canning Machine.

A machine by which the farmer can prepare and can his fruits, tomatoes, corn, beans, or any other farm produce which can be canned, in the fields or orchards in which the vegetable or fruit is growing, is described in Popular Mechanics. Mounted on a wheelbarrow arrangement, the machine can be pushed from one orchard to another or from a tomato patch to a cornfield as necessity requires. Water for the process is heated by a kerosene burner.

How to Set Fence Posts.

Any timber will last quite well if set in this way: Dig a square hole about a foot deep, throwing the dirt well back. Sharpen the post and drive well into the bottom, then put a flat stone against each side and a chunk against the post, the boards holding it the other way. This prevents their rotting off at the surface of the ground as they always do.

Value of Quality.

Extra large specimens of vegetables are all right for exhibition purposes and to win prizes with, but they are not what the average consumer wants and is willing to pay freight on. Quality, uniformity of size and smoothness are what the average man wants.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Corned Beef Hash.

This is perhaps the most usual and at the same time one of the most savory kinds of hash. To make it allow one part of cold boiled potato cut into small cubes to two parts of cold corned beef chopped fine; mix well and season to taste with salt and pepper. Put a large tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan; when melted turn the meat and potato mixture into it and add enough boiling water to moisten thoroughly. Cover closely and set on a hot part of the range for five minutes, being careful not to let it scorch. When a crust is formed on the bottom, turn and brown the upper side, then transfer to a hot plate and send to the table at once.

Peach Shortcake.

Rub two tablespoons of butter in one quart of flour with one-half tablespoon of salt and two teaspoons of baking powder, stir in sweet milk enough to make a soft dough. Mix lightly and bake in a quick oven. When done split and butter while hot. In splitting any kind of hot bread, cut around crust with a sharp knife and open carefully with a fork. Have firm peaches cut in slices well sweetened with powdered sugar. Spread these over one-half of cake, dust with sugar, then lay on the other half and spread with slices of peaches. Serve with plain cream, whipped cream or vanilla ice cream.

To Render Suet.

Many housekeepers are deterred from the economical practice of rendering the suet which the butcher gives with meat on account of the disagreeable odor which is likely to result through the house. Yet beef suet is the best of animal fats for frying, and cannot be obtained in any other way than by rendering it at home. To melt it without smell, keep for the purpose a small pot with a tightly fitting cover, and reduce the suet over a simmering burner, or a flame turned as low as possible. Melted slowly in this way in a covered pan no odor will result.

Stewing Fruits.

According to a clever chemist the housekeeper who sweetens some kinds of sour fruit while stewing them wastes her sugar and runs a risk of altering the color of the fruit, owing to the chemical effects of the acid. Rhubarb is one of the fruits which should not be sweetened until after cooking, and sour berries are also better if prepared in the same way. Add the sugar to taste while the compote is still hot, but do not return to the stove afterward.

Creamed Chicken.

Boil a four-pound chicken until tender. When cold remove the skin and cut the meat into dice. Put two tablespoonfuls of butter and two of flour into a chafing dish and stir in one pint of sweet milk. Stir until the sauce thickens, then add the chicken, a level teaspoonful of salt and a saltspoonful of pepper. Serve on squares of buttered toast.

Bean Roll.

Cook fresh-shelled lima beans in boiling water until tender; press through a sieve, add salt and pepper and a teaspoonful of butter to each pint of pulp. Stir in two well-beaten eggs and bread crumbs enough to make a mixture thick enough to roll. Wrap in greased paper and at serving time bake in quick oven for twenty minutes. Serve with tomato sauce.

Short Suggestions.

Use adhesive plaster to fasten labels to cans or bottles. It is dangerous to leave either without being plainly labeled.

Add a teaspoonful of sugar of lead to the water in which fine silk hosiery is washed to prevent the delicate color from fading.

Wipe off screens with a duster each morning and beat with a soft brush. This beating should be done lightly or the wire may be bulged.

Cold water, a teaspoonful of ammonia and soap will remove machine grease when other means would not answer on account of colors running.

To wash water bottles or any vase having a long neck, fill with clear, hot water and tiny bits of torn paper. Shake well and rinse in cold water.

To prevent tinware rusting rub over with fresh lard and put in a hot oven for a few minutes before using. If treated in this manner it will never rust.

The knife used for peeling a pineapple should never be used for slicing it, as the rind contains an acid that is apt to cause a swollen mouth and sore lips.

A small piece of window glass will be useful for holding the leaves apart on a cook book and one can read the recipe and not soil the book by too much handling.

When ironing between buttons on a shirt waist, place the buttons down on a folded towel and iron on wrong side. The result will be very pleasing to both ironer and wearer.

Add half a teacupful of salt to two quarts of water, or in that proportion, to the lower compartment of a double boiler; less time will be required to cook the contents of the lower one.

A creamy coffee custard can be made by stirring a pint of hot, strong black coffee into a quart of custard while still warm. Beat hard and serve in glasses with or without whipped cream on top. Cool the custards on ice.

Deviled eggs are oftimes filled with French peas, small pieces of sweet pickle, olives and the yolk of the egg softened with butter and hot vinegar. The peas are not mashed into the egg. It makes a delicious egg salad to be served on crisp lettuce leaves.

YOUR BACKACHE WILL YIELD

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rockland, Maine.—"I was troubled for a long time with pains in my back and side, and was miserable in every way. I doctored until I was discouraged, and thought I should never get well. I read a testimonial about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and thought I would try it. After taking three bottles I was cured, and never felt so well in all my life. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends."—Mrs. WILL YOUNG, 6 Columbia Avenue, Rockland, Me.

Backache is a symptom of female weakness or derangement. If you have backache, don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so safely and surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Cure the cause of these distressing aches and pains and you will become well and strong.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has restored health to thousands of women.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge.

Man's Enthusiasm.

LEPER BOY AT TELEGRAPH KEY.

How Penikese Island Colony Will Keep in Touch with the World.

James Archibald Thomas, of Upton, the 16-year-old high school boy banished to the leper colony on Penikese island by order of the board of health last Tuesday, is an expert wireless telegraph operator, and the island will in the future be able to keep in touch with the world through a station to be erected there, says the Boston Post.

For the first time in the history of the colony it will be possible for the lepers to communicate daily with their friends and relatives. Before his banishment young Thomas had fitted up a receiving and sending station at his mother's home, and yesterday his schoolmates decided to ship his plant and aerial mast to the island or to buy a new outfit throughout.

Thus the lad's misfortune will prove the greatest of blessings to his unfortunate fellow prisoners on the bleak little island. In the past the only avenue of communication with the mainland has been by means of the tug maintained by the Massachusetts board of charities, which brings the mail and supplies from New Bedford to Penikese, except when fog or wind makes navigation impossible. It has made trips almost daily, but now the weather will be no bar to communication between the lepers and their friends, for with Thomas at the key messages can be sent and received at any hour.

During the last three years Thomas has mingled freely with the school children at his home in Upton, yet it is asserted that he has all the time borne the marks of leprosy. It is said that his father died of the dread disease in the West Indies.

PRESSED HARD.

Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When prominent men realize the injurious effects of coffee and the change in health that Postum can bring, they are glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

A superintendent of public schools in one of the southern states says:

"My mother, since her early childhood, was an inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak all over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making an official visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat peculiar flavor of the coffee, and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it, that after the meal was over, I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family were so well pleased with it, that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had really been at times very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time, she felt so much better than she did prior to its use, and had little trouble with her heart and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was as well and hearty as the rest of us.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, but not in so marked a degree as in the case of my mother, as she was a victim of long standing." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

AGONIZING ITCHING

Eczema for a Year—Got No Relief Even at Skin Hospital—In Despair Until Cuticura Cured Him.

"I was troubled by a severe itching and dry, scurfy skin on my ankles, feet, arms and scalp. Scratching made it worse. Thousands of small red pimples formed and these caused intense itching. I was advised to go to the hospital for diseases of the skin. I did so, the chief surgeon saying: 'I never saw such a bad case of eczema.' But I got little or no relief. Then I tried many so-called remedies, but I became so bad that I almost gave up in despair. After suffering agonies for twelve months, I was relieved of the almost unbearable itching after two or three applications of Cuticura Ointment. I continued its use, combined with Cuticura Soap and Pills, and I was completely cured." Henry Searle, Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 8 and 10, '07."

To the King's Taste.

We learn in "Leaves from the Journal of Sir George Smart," recently edited by H. Bertram Cox and C. L. Cox, that when Sir George, who was chorister at the Chapel Royal, arranged the musical program at the opening of the new London Bridge, in 1831, his chief attraction was a glee party.

Immediately after the glee party had sung "God Save the King," in the tent in which the king and queen were seated, two unknown persons in costume, a man and his wife, stepped forward, and to Sir George's infinite disgust, the man played "God Save the King" with his knuckles on his chin, accompanied by his wife's voice.

The king called Sir George to him and asked who they were. Sir George by that time knew the name of the performers and gave it, adding that he was sorry they had intruded without permission.

"Oh, no intrusion," said the king. "It was charming. Tell them to perform again."

So Sir George had to tell the performers that their number was encored by royal command, and to their great delight and to the chagrin of Sir George, they repeated it.

KEEP BABY HEALTHY; FREE

No child can be well and strong unless its bowels move regularly every day at the same hour. Such regularity promotes good health. One passage is absolutely necessary, while two are not too many.

There is one remedy that is especially adapted to the needs of children, and which thousands of American mothers are using to-day, and that is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the great herb laxative compound. Its gentle action, so free from griping, its tonic effects, and its perfect purity, vouched for to the United States government, makes it an ideal children's laxative tonic.

Mrs. M. F. Cash, of Webb, Okla., is an old-time friend of this wonderful child's remedy and she says she could scarcely keep house without it. She became acquainted with it through Dr. Caldwell's offer of a free trial bottle, which she found so effective on her baby that she now always keeps it in the house. Mrs. K. L. Stout, of Louisville, Ky., also first used it in a free sample, then bought it of her druggist at the regular price, which is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle. It gave her little girl a splendid appetite and a vigorous stomach. Where Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin once finds its way into the home it makes a life-long friend. They soon discard salts, pills and powders.

Those who have never yet used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin should begin to do so, for they are missing a valuable household friend. In order to acquaint you with its merits at no expense to yourself the doctor will send you a free test bottle on receipt of name and address. It has been justly called the nation's safeguard to health in the cure of constipation, dyspepsia, heartburn, liver trouble, sick headache, sour stomach and similar digestive ailments.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

A Deceptive Attitude.

A scene that was more than farcical, declares M. A. P., occurred in the House of Commons last session. Two of the most respectable members of the House were seen with their coats off, and with a staid old policeman standing between them. They two had been downstairs to wash their hands, and by some mischance had changed coats. They went into the House together. One of them, putting his hand into his coat pocket, pulled out an old brier pipe of very strong flavor. It was not his.

He looked at the coat, also that of his neighbor, and turning to his friend, said:

"Excuse me, but I think you have put on my coat."

"I beg your pardon; I have done nothing of the kind."

"I think," replied the other member, "this is your pipe; and if you put your hand into the right-hand pocket of the coat you are wearing you will find a cigar case."

"Dear me!" was the reply. "You certainly are right. What shall we do?"

"We cannot change in the House," observed the first member. "Let us go into the division lobby."

Here is where the policeman came in. Seeing the two facing each other, and at the same time taking off their coats, the policeman feared the worst. He rushed up, and placing a hand on the shoulder of each, said:

"Gentlemen! Gentlemen! Not here, please!"

Why Not Grow Them

Imports of potatoes into the United States this spring have been enormous. The receipts for the first three months of 1909, were 3,629,158 bushels, against 128,676 bushels in the same period last year. Heavy cargoes have come from Europe, and shipments have even been made from Mexico to this country.

Consul A. G. Seyfert writes from Owen Sound that the demand for potatoes in the United States this spring has been a good thing for the Canadian farmers in that district. The soil and climate there are well adapted to the raising of large crops of an excellent quality of potatoes. American buyers have bought and exported over 50,000 bushels during the months of March and April from that locality. The most of them were shipped to Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago and Pittsburg. The average price paid was 50 cents a bushel. The first boat that left Owen Sound harbor had 7,500 bushels on board for the Canadian northwest. The price paid was about fifteen cents a bushel more than in other years, caused by American demand. The potato is one of the main crops of the Georgia Bay farmer, and he raises 200 to 350 bushels to the acre.

A bushel of potatoes is worth more than a bushel of corn, can be grown on cheaper ground and costs little more to cultivate. What is more, there are millions of acres of good land on which corn cannot be raised. American farmers are overlooking a good bet when they do not plant potatoes.—Chicago Live Stock World.

Mrs. Howe's Vision

Julia Ward Howe, one of America's sweetest singers, recently celebrated her 90th birthday. Mrs. Howe recently had a vision which she described in this way:

"One night recently, I experienced a sudden awakening. I had a vision of a new era which is to dawn for mankind and in which men and women are battling equally, unitedly, for the uplifting and emancipation of the race from evil.

"I saw men and women of every clime working like bees to unwrap the evils of society and to discover the whole web of vice and misery, and to apply the remedies and also to find the influences that should best counteract evil and its attending suffering.

"There seemed to be a new, a wondrous ever permeating light, the glory of which I can not attempt to put in human words—the light of new born hope and sympathy blazing. The source of this light was human endeavor—immortal purpose of countless thousands of men and women, who were equally doing their part in the world.

"I saw the men and the women standing side by side, shoulder to shoulder, a common, lofty and indomitable purpose lighting every face with a glory not of this earth. All were advancing with one end in view, one foe to trample, one everlasting good to gain.

"And then I saw the victory. All of evil was gone from the earth. Misery was blotted out. Mankind was emancipated and ready to march forward in a new era of human understanding, all-encompassing sympathy and ever present help. The era of perfect love, of peace passing understanding."

There are many who are simple hearted enough to believe that Mrs. Howe's vision described the world as it will become through the process of education. In the light of the moral awakening apparent on every hand, in the presence of the wealth of individual effort toward the world's betterment these simple hearted folk feel that, in the very language of Mrs. Howe's beautiful hymn:

"He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before his judgment seat;
Oh! be swift, my soul, to answer him! Be jubilant, my feet!
Our God is marching on."

President Eliot of Harvard said the other day that if it was not true that the colleges were the hotbeds of Socialism in America. He said that Socialism could not come until man changed utterly—until he changed from a selfish to an unselfish being. President Eliot illustrated the present disposition of man with a brief story.

"An ardent Socialist," he said, "lived in a country village. He did no work to be passed in the general store he had no money. All his time seemed preaching rabid Socialism and borrowing tobacco. Suddenly this man disappeared. Nothing was seen of his for ten years. Then one day, he turned up again in his old haunts.

"'Well, Jabe,' said the storekeeper, 'you're still a Socialist, I suppose?'

"'Not on your life,' Jabez answered warmly. 'I got a cow now.'"

Don't forget the Butler band concert Saturday night. A fine program will be rendered.

John Fisk, who resides two miles north of Waterloo, had the misfortune Tuesday morning of having both bones broken just below the left ankle and his body bruised in several places. Mr. Fisk was leading a calf to pasture when the animal became frisky and started to run. Wrapping the rope about his wrists Mr. Fisk made an attempt to hold the animal and in so doing stumbled and was thrown violently to the ground and dragged quite a distance before he was able to extricate himself. Dr. Showalter, of Waterloo, was called and made an examination as to the extent of his injuries. He found that Mr. Fisk had the bones broken as stated before and had sustained other injuries that are painful.

A Checking Account With a Bank

is a great convenience. The business man can not do without it. The professional man will not do without it. The farmer should not do with out it. More people would keep such accounts if they knew just how to go about it. We gladly assist those who need help in getting started.

Bank your money as fast as you get it. Pay by check. You will be at a great disadvantage unless you do business as the rest of the world does it. Ninety per cent. of the business in the United States is done with bank checks.

Your checks become as good as bank notes; your balance at the bank will keep growing; your credit will become firmly established—and you will soon have the working capital that makes money multiply.

A Certificate of Deposit Account

is what we call more of a savings account. If you want to use your money put it in the bank and keep a checking account with the bank. However, if you want a savings account, i. e., you have some money you are not going to use, put it in the bank on a certificate of deposit and we pay you 3 per cent. interest on the same if left six months.

We will be glad to have your name on our books either with a checking account or a certificate of deposit.

No account too small to be appreciated and receive our best attention.

Have your sale notes made payable at the First National Bank and we will collect them for you. We solicit your acquaintance and will be glad to serve you.

We have a few souvenirs on hand. If you did not get any please call and ask for one.

PROHIBS FORCE REPUBLICANS

Driven By Hanly Who Wants to Ride into the United States Senate

The following article is taken from the Tippecanoe county Democrat and contains much truth:

"The goal of the anti-saloon forces is state wide prohibition, and the prohibition party expects to lead when this movement is formally inaugurated.

"Indeed there are many far-seeing politicians who profess to believe that Hanly will attempt to deliver the republican party in Indiana into the prohibition camp, wrecking the g. o. p., as the only means of beating Beveridge to the senate. They profess to believe that the fight of 1910, will be between the democrats and the prohibitionists.

"The prohibition party hopes to corral the Anti-Saloon league, which numbers in its membership many republicans, thus finding the stepping stone to republican party dissolution. The prohibitionists are not satisfied with county prohibition. They joined the anti-saloon forces in their contests as a means of strengthening their forces and for obtaining recruits for their cause. It is hard to estimate, at this time, the number of recruits the prohibitionists have secured. It is hard to figure how many republicans would follow Hanly into the prohibition camp.

"Surely many new faces will be seen in the next prohibition state convention."

John H. Smith, one of Butler's highly respected citizens, a soldier and a member of the Knights of Pythias passed into the beyond, Sunday morning, at 4:30 a. m., after an illness of only a few days. The following obituary is given:

TEN LIVES CRUSHED OUT

And Forty Hurt in Crash Between Two Traction Cars.

Ten persons were killed and forty injured in the wreck on the Chicago, Lake Shore & South Bend railroad in Porter County, Indiana, when two of the big electric cars collided head-on. According to General Manager H. U. Wallace, the wreck was due to a disobedience of orders by Motorman Geo. A. Reed, of the east-bound car, who was killed. Reed received instructions at Gary to wait at Wilson, a short distance west of Baileytown, the point at which the disaster occurred, for the west-bound car to pass. The impact of the cars was so great that they were reduced to a mass of wreckage.

The Dead.

GEO. A. REED, motorman, Michigan City; formerly of Villa Grove, Ill.
RAY F. MERRIMAN, married, South Bend.
CHARLES JOHNSON, Porter, Ind.
EDWARD GILBERTSON, Porter, Ind.
A. BARBER, Mishawaka, Ind.
F. T. MOORE, residence unknown.
WILLIAM LEON, secretary of the Dowagiac Motor Works, Dowagiac, Mich.
F. A. LAKE, President Dowagiac Motor Works, Dowagiac, Mich.
H. H. HUTSON, Niles, Mich.
CHARLES SWANSTON, Porter, Ind.

The east-bound car running at train No. 59, it is stated, was going at the rate of fifty miles an hour to make up lost time. When the crash occurred the east-bound car was telescoped. In this train were all of the killed and most of the injured, passengers on train No. 58, west-bound, escaping with slight bruises and scratches. The body of Motorman Reed was terribly mutilated. One of his arms and one leg were found a dozen yards from the track and his body was pinioned near the top of the wreckage. Delbert E. Kinney, conductor of the east-bound car, is in a South Bend hospital and probably will recover. The South Shore line, as the road is known, has been in operation for about one year, running cars from South Bend to Chicago.

Dr. Foster Is Ousted.

Professor George Burman Foster, of the University of Chicago, whose denial of the divinity of Christ in a recent book has stirred Chicago Baptists to the high pitch of resentment, was dropped from the Baptist Ministers' conference of Chicago. Hisses, yells and general confusion made the meeting one of the stormiest ever held by churchmen in Chicago, and it was referred to by one preacher as resembling a political meeting in a rowdy ward. Speakers who had been howled or hissed down sat with flushed, indignant faces while the chairman pounded for order. During the excitement motions, counter-motions, and parliamentary mixup prevailed. After four hours, however, worn out by exertions and emotions the preachers adopted the resolution dropping Prof. Foster from the conference. The conference has not the power to expel him from the church, and while such an event seemed to be desired by those present, no definite plan of action was mapped out.

Diagnosed Ailment and Killed Himself

Believing he was suffering unendurable pains from a disease of an artery, Dr. Justin Steer, a member of the faculty of the medical department of Washington University, killed himself at his home in St. Louis, Mo., with prussic acid. He left a note diagnosing his ailment. The family physician said he and several specialists had examined Dr. Steer many times and that Dr. Steer had no illness such as he thought he had.

Landslide Derails a Train.

The Great Northern west-bound Oriental Limited passenger train was derailed near Ural, Mont., on the Kootenai river. Thirty passengers were injured, but none killed. A landslide caused the accident.

CHEVROLET WINS CUP IN MOTOR CAR RACE

Crowd of 35,000 Persons Cheers Victors in West's First Big Automobile Meet.

MATSON TAKES INDIANA TROPHY

Daring Drivers Defy Curves of Death, and Machines Reach a Speed of Nearly 100 Miles an Hour.

Amid plaudits from shrieking thousands, Joe Matson, a Western speed annihilator, on Friday won the Indiana Trophy stock chassis race, the first event in the West's big two-day automobile meet. He drove his 25.6 horse power Chalmers-Detroit car over 232-74 miles on the Crown Point-Lowell course in 4:31:21, or at an average speed of 51½ miles an hour. He was sixteenth and last to start and third to cross the tape. The redoubtable George Robertson, winner of the Vanderbilt cup race last fall, was second in the Locomobile, covering the ground in 4:39:03. In third place ran A. Monsen, in a Marion car, his time being 4:42:03. Terrific bursts of speed were made at times over the best portions of the roadway, Burman in a Buick making one lap around the 23.27-mile course in 23:41, near enough to be a mile a minute to call it such.

Not a racer was spilled and not a car turned turtle. The pilots went around the curves discreetly instead of precipitately. They had been cautioned by their managers against being foolishly reckless and they took no more chances than needed at treacherous spots.

Chevrolet Wins Cobe Cup.

Out of a field of twelve speed demons Louis Chevrolet Saturday won the Cobe Cup race—the West's premier auto prize—driving his Buick car over 395.66 miles on the Crown Point-Lowell course in 8:01:39, or at the rate of 49.3 miles an hour.

"Billy" Bourque, in the Knox, came second, beaten for first place by a margin of :01:05, while George Robertson, in his Locomobile, got third place, his time being 8:14:30. Because he started tenth and was crowded closely in the final laps, Chevrolet followed Bourque over the tape. In spurts of speed nearly 100 miles an hour was reached.

The following table shows the record of each car and order of time standing:

Order.	Car.	Driver.
1	Buick	Chevrolet
2	Knox	Bourque
3	Locomobile	Robertson
4	Fiat	Hearne
5	Stoddard -Dayton	Engelbeck
6	*Buick	Strang (13 laps)
7	Stoddard -Dayton	Miller (12 laps)
8	Apperson	Lytle (11 laps)
9	Knox	Denison (6 laps)
10	Buick	Burman (5 laps)
11	Apperson	Seymour (3 laps)
12	Locomobile	Florida, out in 1st

*Strang was still on course when race finished.

At the conclusion of the race Chicago Auto Club officials announced $60,000 had been expended on the event and that they were well satisfied. No statement of receipts or deficit was given out.

The first ambitious effort of the Chicago Automobile Club to present a Western automobile "classic" which might compare with the Eastern Vanderbilt cup races was a success from the automobile racing point of view.

Perfect weather, a course which is pronounced excellent by racing authorities, and entirely sincere enthusiasm on the part of the intense persons who drove the cars combined to make the opener a hit with the lovers of rapid transit who saw the races.

Estimates vary as to the attendance at the big race, as the onlookers were scattered over the 23.37 miles of the course, but the highest figures place the attendance at about 35,000. Troops stationed along the route kept the course clear.

Three Submarine Boats Launched.

Three new submarine boats of the United States navy were launched the other day at the works of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company in Quincy, Mass. The boats are the Grayling, Bonito and Snapper.

Train Robbers Kill a Man.

In a battle between officers and three train robbers who held up St. Louis and Iron Mountain and Southern freight train No. 168, near Bragg, Okla., Deputy Constable Kirk was killed. Robbery was the motive for the crime. The prisoner will be taken to Fort Pierre and placed in the county jail.

Maloney registered at the hotel at Sioux City, May 28, as Mike McCann of Kansas City. He was in the employ of Toney and Goodwin, who were running a breaking outfit. The bodies of two men, J. Goodwin of Rock Valley, Iowa, and W. D. Toney of Sioux City, were found Saturday in a well on the McNally ranch, two miles north of Kadoka. Toney and Goodwin were running a breaking outfit on the McNally ranch. They were known to have had about $900 in cash when they arrived, May 19. Ten days later Maloney came to town and said he had bought his employers out and taken them to Phillip the night before. He disposed of several of the horses and later left town with the rest of the breaking outfit. When the bodies were found Saturday the city marshal started in pursuit of Maloney and arrested him at Cottonwood.

AN EXCITING DAY FOR INDIANA.

TWO IOWA MEN MURDERED.

Mike Maloney Confesses Crime at Kadoka, S. D.

Mike Maloney, who was arrested Friday evening at Cottonwood, S. D., by Marshal Wiltfang of Kadoka, has confessed having murdered W. D. Toney and J. Goodwin of Sioux City, whose bodies were found in a well on the McNally ranch Friday morning. Maloney said he killed one man with an ax and the other with a club, and the conditions of the skulls of the murdered men bear out this statement.

TRY TO ASSASSINATE A MAYOR.

Attempt to Burn House of Executive in Town in Ohio Is Made.

What is believed to have been an attempt to assassinate Mayor William R. Niven and burn his residence in Bellefontaine, Ohio, was made the other day when a burning bottle filled with kerosene was thrown through the large plate-glass window of his house. Curtains, carpets and all furniture in the room were set on fire, but the department quickly extinguished them. The mayor was away from home at the time. Mayor Niven was elected on a "dry" ticket two years ago. He is a well-known democratic politician, a member of the State committee, and last year made the race for Congress.

10,000 TO STRIKE JUNE 30.

Iron, Steel and Tin Workers to Fight "Open Shop" Order.

More than 10,000 skilled workmen members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers who are employed by the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, will quit work on the night of June 30, at which time the "open-shop" order of the company becomes effective. Many unskilled workmen also will be affected. The decision to take this action followed a special convention held in Pittsburg. It occasioned little surprise as at a previous meeting, held by the advisory board, resolutions were adopted strongly recommending that the union resist the company's order. In the Pittsburg district a majority of the mills of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, which is a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, are nonunion. The combined plants in which a strike order will be effective total 152 mills capacity in the tin trade and fifty-one mills in the sheet steel trade. By States the mills are grouped as follows: Pennsylvania—Greer and Shenango plants, New Castle (tin), 50 mills; Sharon (tin), 20 mills; Connellsville (tin), 6 mills. Ohio—Martins Ferry (tin), 23 mills; Bridgeport (sheet), 23 mills; Cambridge (sheet), 11 mills; Piqua and Struthers (sheet), 10 mills. West Virginia—Wheeling (tin), 16 mills. Indiana—Elwood, Anderson and Gas City (tin), 43 mills; Muncie (sheet), 7 mills.

Work of Congress

The message of President Taft recommending the incorporation in the tariff bill of a tax on corporation earnings was read in the Senate Wednesday and referred to the committee on finance after Senator Gore had made an ineffectual effort to order the committee to report next Friday. The finance committee's recommendations regarding the admission of Philippine products was adopted. Senator Aldrich presented the committee's substitute for the House zinc schedule and after several long speeches this also was adopted. The silk schedule as reported Tuesday was agreed to. Mr. Aldrich said it made the rates slightly above the existing law. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate spent the greater part of the day Thursday in the discussing of Senator Aldrich's amendment increasing the duty on print paper from one-tenth to two-tenths of a cent per pound. Senator Brown of Nebraska in opposing the increase asserted that even under the present tariff the American mills had a big advantage over those of Canada, and declared that the cost of production of the Dominion was greater than in the United States. This statement was denied by Senators Aldrich and Hale. The duty on illustrated post cards was raised 325 per cent to shut out German competition. The Senate schedule on window glass was adopted fixing a lower duty than under the Dingley law or that provided in the House bill. After a wrangle of nearly an hour the Democrats in the House failed to obtain the passage of a resolution calling upon the State Department for the transmission to the House of reports on foreign wages and cost of production in foreign countries, except Germany. Representative Hull of Tennessee, author of the resolution, made the point of no quorum. The House then adjourned, after a roll call, until Monday. The President's special message on corporation and income taxes was read at the beginning of the session.

-:—:-

The Senate Friday adopted, by a vote of 44 to 32, the finance committee's amendment placing a duty of $4 a ton on print paper instead of $2, as provided in the House bill. Senator Brown's amendment for free print paper was voted down, 52 to 29, Senator Lorimer, who had just been sworn in, casting his first vote against the amendment. Shortly before adjournment Senator Bailey's income tax amendment became a regular order of business, and an agreement was sought for the disposition of that measure. Senator Aldrich stated that he was willing to take up the amendment and dispose of it when the schedules are completed. Senator Bailey sought unanimous agreement by which the Senate would take a direct vote on the passage of his amendment, excluding any motion to refer it to a committee. This was not agreed to, and at the established hour, 7 o'clock, the Senate adjourned. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate Saturday covered a multitude of subjects in connection with the tariff, but made final disposition of nothing of importance. Beginning at 10 o'clock the income and corporation tax questions received attention for some time and ultimately were postponed, with the understanding that they should not be taken up again until after the tariff provisions proper should be finally settled. Senator Aldrich brought in the committee amendment to the wood pulp paragraph, which proved to be a provision for doubling the duty on wood pulp coming from countries which undertake to prohibit the exportation of logs to this country. Senator Beveridge presented an amendment for the cutting in two of the House ad valorem duty on cash registers. Mr. Aldrich also presented the finance committee's provision for a duty on hides. All these measures were brought to the attention of the Senate, but so far as action was concerned were left at the close of the day where they stood at the beginning. The House was not in session.

TAFT ASKS 2 PER CENT. TAX ON CORPORATIONS

President, in Special Message, Recommends Levy Upon the Net Earnings.

WOULD INVITE AID OF STATES.

Congress Advised to Seek Constitutional Amendment Allowing Assessment on Incomes.

Recommending legislation looking to the placing of a 2 per cent tax on the net income of corporations and also the adoption of an amendment to the constitution providing for the imposition of an income tax without an apportionment among the several states, President Taft Wednesday sent to Congress a message embodying his views on the subject. This action followed a protracted special meeting of the cabinet.

In his message the president speaks of the apparent inability of Congress to agree to an inheritance tax, and as regards an income tax, he refers to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Pollock vs. the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, in which the court held the tax to be unconstitutional unless apportioned according to population. "It is," says the president, "undoubtedly a power which the government ought to have. It might be indispensable to the nation's life in great crises."

The amendment, therefore, he declares, is the only proper course. Such an amendment to the constitution, he contended, was preferable to the one proposed of reviving a law judicially declared to be unconstitutional. The amendment which he proposes should be made to the tariff bill provides for the imposition upon all corporations and joint stock companies for profit, except national banks (otherwise taxed), savings banks and building and loan associations, of an excise tax of 2 per cent on the net income of the corporations. This, it is estimated by him, will bring an annual revenue of $25,000,000. "This is a tax on privilege and not on property," he says, "and is within the federal power without apportionment according to population."

The president points out that another merit to the tax on corporations is the federal supervision, which will give to the government, the stockholders and the public knowledge of the real business transactions and the gains and profits of every corporation in the country. The adoption of the amendment, he says, will make a long step "toward that supervisory control of corporations which may prevent a further abuse of power."

TWELVE IN BLACK HAND NET.

Raid in Cincinnati Held Important in Ohio Crusade.

In a spectacular raid made by postoffice inspectors and city detectives a patrol wagon full of Italians was rounded up in Cincinnati Thursday night and taken before Federal Commissioner Loveland. The party arrested comprised an even dozen men, and two of that number, Vicenzo Arrigo, fruit dealer, and Frank Spadero, saloon-keeper, were held on warrants charging them with conspiracy in connection with an alleged attempt to extort money from John Amicon of Columbus, Ohio, by Black Hand methods. Inspector Oldfield, who led the raid which resulted in the arrests, said that proof had been obtained that Spadero up to three weeks ago was the local president of the Society of the Banana, since succeeded by Salvatore Lima. In the raid a large amount of literature was captured, which the inspectors declare has an important bearing on the cases of the Black Hand suspects recently arrested at Marion, Columbus and other Ohio points.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Business shows prompt response to the more seasonable weather and broadening of demands in the leading industries. Heavy financial operations in part account for the sustained high level of payments through the banks, but there is a notably better absorption of money for commercial use, together with a discount rate, which favors enterprise. Less complaint arises as to the course of dealings in the prominent retail lines, there being improved absorption of light weight apparel and general merchandise and an adequate reduction of stocks here and in the country. Wholesale dealing is well maintained in the staples, bookings showing further increase for fall deliveries of dry goods, footwear, suits and clothing. Improvement is also seen in the buying of furniture, carpets and draperies.

The general demand for food products, jewelry, art wares and sporting goods makes a substantial advance. Heavy contracts are booked for future outputs in iron, steel, wood and leather working, the principal products now drawing upon capacity closer to the normal, while further progress is made in machinery and hands employed. Track needs furnish considerable tonnage for the rail mills, quite a portion being for South America. The demand for light rails is the best in almost two years. The conversion of raw materials exhibits expansion and the prices are very firm for pig iron, lumber, minor metals, hides and wool.

Bank clearings, $282,057,748, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 28 per cent and compare with $243,541,754 in 1907. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 26, against 21 last week, 33 in 1908 and 22 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 9, against 4 last week, 9 in 1908 and 9 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review.

NEW YORK.

The tendency is still toward improvement, the general crop situation, manufacturing industry and bookings for fall showing further gains, but irregularities of weather still retard the fullest development of retail trade and thereby affect re-order business with jobbers.

In industrial lines the tendency is toward further expansion of operations. Numerous early cuts in wages have been restored and employment is more widely diffused. The building trades probably lead in volume of activity, but there are still complaints that lumber is not selling as freely as expected.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with June 17 were 213, against 197 last week, 254 in the like week of 1908, 165 in 1907, 173 in 1906 and 157 in 1905. Business failures for the week in Canada number 28, against 29 last week and 23 in the same week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

A Hazard of Hearts

By ALIX JOHN

CHAPTER I.—(Continued.)

Her mourning was accounted for by the recent death of her father. He had been a well-known politician and legal light in Montreal, and, like so many of his kind, after living in careless ease, had died, leaving but a pittance for his heirs. In this case Miss Thorne had been the only sufferer, as her mother was long since dead and her brothers well established in professions.

The captain had also heard rumors that the man to whom she had been engaged had behaved badly, and backed out when he had found how small her means were to be.

"Hound!"

"Well, yes. It was a mean trick to play a girl."

"Where was she going to now?"

The captain rather thought that she was going to Paris, where she had studied painting before the marriage of an elder sister had made her presence at home necessary.

These were the facts elicited by Stewart and present in his mind now, as he sat in the usual corner, amongst the group around the tea things.

The short day was darkening in the early twilight of those all but Arctic regions. The ship rolled in long weary heaves, as though tired by her week's battle with wind and waves.

The teapot and milk jug required to be each barricaded into their own separate corner of the fiddles, while biscuit plate and sugar bowl slid harmlessly from side to side.

Charlie Hudson had just made a rather late appearance, which was explained by the resplendent pink-and-white frosted cake he carried.

"There, Miss Thorne!" he said, triumphantly. "You see I was not going to be done out of my Christmas cake. Wake up, you fellows! Don't you know that it's Christmas eve?"

"I hardly perceive a motive for wakefulness in that loudly proclaimed fact. I should rather consider it an incentive to 'a little more sleep, and a little more slumber,'" was Stewart's languid retort, while Captain Kerr put the question:

"Where did you secure that booty, youngster? I trust that you have not been plundering the galley?"

"A small but judicious donation to the cook, my friend. I was not going to be done out of my Christmas cake. Miss Thorne, allow me to present a humble offering at the shrine of friendship," and with a low bow, he placed in front of the girl the cake, on which in pink letters ran the words, "A Happy Christmas."

As Miss Thorne looked up at him with a silent smile, the youth was seized with terrible misgivings that his friendly action might bring about the awesome effect of a burst of tears.

Captain Kerr also fluttered nervously under the same dread. Stewart alone guessed that that pathetic surface smile had as little to do with any emotion as the wan sun that had flickered through the clouds at noon had to do with any of mother earth's kindly warmth.

"I would give a fiver to know how that girl spent last Christmas Day," was what he thought. What he said was:

"Here is a knife to cut it with, O gentle president of our humble feast. After all, the boy does occasionally have a happy inspiration. Give me a large slice, please, and I will try to revive some of the lost joys of my youth. It may make me feel young. It most probably will make me feel twice my usual age through the pangs of indigestion."

Meanwhile young Hudson had edged himself on to the seat on the sofa next to Miss Thorne's corner.

"You don't know where I have been," he said, confidentially. "Down into the steerage to buy a Christmas tree, or rather to hire it, for some of the men are taking them home to their families, which will be a little too late for the fair. At any rate, I have secured one 'for this occasion only.'"

"Whatever are you going to do with a Christmas tree?" his listener asked in surprise.

"Have a party, to be sure, and try to get the ghost of a smile out of those two goblin ancient mariner children. I warn you, all of you, that if I don't have some species of entertainment to-morrow you will have me committing suicide, and leaving a demned, damp, moist, unpleasant body on your hands."

"Bodies are easily disposed of at sea," was Stewart's laconic comment.

"Well—but to business," Hudson went on. "I have the tree in an empty cabin next to mine. The head steward says that after dinner we may put it on the end of that far table and decorate it to-night, and that he will screen it off with a flag, and it can be all ready for to-morrow's dinner table."

"Dinner table! It's to be a public affair, and you contemplate the bestowal of gifts on all the smoking room? So much for the courage of youth! And where are these same gifts to come from?"

"Gently, my friend! One thing at a time!" rejoined Hudson, patting Stewart on the back. "The public element is easily managed. Every one at the saloon table will be asked to contribute one gift, so that there will be a present for each person. These will be marked with numbers, duplicates of which will be drawn. Besides these, any personal gifts can be marked by name, such as toys for the children. The steward has promised me fruit and sweets for ornamental purposes, but I don't see any way to the toys. Do you think"—with an insinuating appeal to Miss Thorne—"that you could help me to make two dolls this evening?"

"Dolls!" the two men listeners simultaneously exclaimed. The lady stared at him for an instant, then, breaking into a laugh with a reckless echo, while there came a flash into her eyes and a bright pink spot on each cheek, she said:

"O, yes; why not? All you ask is to make a happy Christmas to order, like the cake; and dolls in the mid-Atlantic without materials. One task seems equally feasible with the other, so why should we not attempt them both? Let me see. The doctor can surely furnish a supply of cotton wool sufficient for the internal economy of each doll. I think that I have some old white kid gloves which will make their heads and arms. You must go and beg for some rope yarn for hair, and see if any of the officers can lend you water-colors with which to do their faces."

"I can supply the paints," put in Captain Kerr, beginning to be interested.

"That's right. And now for the attire," Miss Thorne went on.

"I have a red and green silk muffler," said Charlie Hudson, whose gorgeous attire had been a standing joke against him in his "tendorfoot" days.

"Oh, it's a pity to use it. I dare say that I can find some scraps," and Miss Thorne hurried off to her cabin to rummage, while Captain Kerr started preparations for making cardboard furniture, and young Hudson went in seach of the required materials.

"Plucky girl!" commented Stewart to himself. "She is going to brave out in the right fashion this beastly Christmas time, which seems to have been invented as the last straw to suffering humanity. Half an hour ago it was just a toss-up whether she took it in that way or broke down altogether."

That evening the little group toiled with many jests over their self-imposed task. Gay bursts of laughter greeted the ever-increasing ghastliness of the dolls, with faces painted by Mr. Stewart, wild mops of tow hair manufactured by Charlie Hudson, and garments deftly sewn together by Miss Thorne.

As the darkness of Christmas Eve gathered over sea and sky, the stars looked down on many an incongruous sight, but on few more original merrymakings than on that little group in the saloon of the St. Lawrence as she ploughed her slow way through the long sweep of the Atlantic rollers.

CHAPTER II.

Christmas morning dawned with a wan and watery sunshine over the troubled waste of waters.

The first "motif" of the day was, of course, "tips"—tips here, there, and everywhere, and the real and simulated cheerfulness which they entailed on recipient and bestower.

It was in anticipation of these that the breakfast table had been made bright with English holly and mistletoe. Miss Thorne was the last to take her place at the captain's table, and on her appearance there was almost a demonstration. Friendly were the hands stretched out, and hearty were the voices that sounded in "Merry Christmas!"

It would have been a bit of an ordeal in any solitary girl in mid-Atlantic, let alone to one whose black dress signified a new-made grave across the road that lay between her and last Christmas.

But Miss Thorne gave no sign of finding it so. With smiling eyes and lips, and with deeply flushed cheeks, she was transformed into a brilliant woman, and even the bagmen gazed in open admiration as she stood, steadying herself with one hand on the back of her chair, against the pitching of the vessel, while with the other she tried to meet the outstretched hands.

"Happy Christmas to you all! A hundred happy Christmases, if you will only let me sit down first and shake hands afterwards! Captain, please tell them to sit down."

"To your seats, gentlemen," the captain sonorously proclaimed in his broad Lancashire. "Here, Miss Thorne, come under my protection"—turning her chair towards her. "People must have their oatmeal porridge and bacon, Christmas Day or not, mustn't they?"

"I'm sure that it's only out of flattery to you that Miss Thorne takes oatmeal porridge at all, captain," Charlie Hudson audaciously announced.

"Miss Thorne is far too sensible a girl for that," was the captain's answer, as he bestowed a friendly pat upon her arm. In his honest heart was a warm sympathy with the girl, and his eye had grown dim as he watched the tall, black figure making its way down the saloon, and had thought of his own hearty girls at home.

But no friendly greeting or gesture brought a shadow of softness to those grey eyes that morning.

Brightly she discussed the topics of the day, which exist in whatever isolation. The various difficulties of the toys of last evening's manufacture; the position of the tree, and the hour of its unveiling; the chances of dry decks and an hour's constitutional; the probable amount of the day's run—were discussed with all the zest ever given on shore to the morning's post and newspaper.

It was an hour or so after breakfast, and Miss Thorne was in the saloon, busy putting her last stitches in one of the dolls, Mr. Stewart, looking very bristling in his long bear-skin coat and over-hanging cap, appeared, making his way towards her.

"It's something that might almost be said to approach to a fine day," he announced. "There is a species of sunshine going on, and the decks are quite dry. I have some bearskins in a sunny corner by one of the skylights, and I'm sure that if you were to wrap yourself up well, you might sit on deck for a time. You have not had a breath of fresh air for three days except in the companion way."

"Do you think that it is really worth the trouble?" she asked in an impersonal fashion, and then seeing in his insistent attitude that he did, and apparently too indifferent to argue the point, she yielded. "Oh, well, I dare say that it might freshen one up a little bit. I seem to have forgotten that fresh air and sunshine existed. I have grown so used to this," she said, with a glance around the cheerless saloon.

When she reappeared she was wrapped in handsome sealskin coat and cap, the dark richness of which brought out the lights and shades of the red-brown hair, and the delicate skin tinting, and altogether dispersed the haggard effect wrought by austerity of the dull black dress which she had been wearing.

Seated on one bearskin and covered by another, she was well protected in a sunny corner.

Blinking from the bewildering effect of light and space, she looked up to the thin clouds drifting over the pale blue sky, to the waite gulls that swept in clamoring circles around the vessel, and crowded in her wake.

The grey space of sea was streaked with blue-green patches of color where the sunshine reached it through clouds. Compared to the surroundings of the past week, there was a certain modified cheerfulness in the scene, but there was no friendly greeting to sea or sky in the grey eyes whose glance wandered over them. Their old charm to hearten and soothe was gone, and they were merely part of that world which her whole nature was strung up, to stand at bay.

Mr. Stewart had ensconced at her side and they were practically alone, a noisy group being absorbed in shuffle-board at the other end of the deck.

STORIES ABOUT SEALS.

How a Young One Was Made a Pet and Afterwards Ran Away.

Some people think that a seal has no intelligence, but a writer in Our Little Ones tells the story of a seal which was found by a man who was out fishing, and that later proved to be quite wise in its way. The seal was a young one, and the man found it fast asleep upon a dock, and gently lifted it into his canoe. The poor thing cried to get back into the water, but its captor wanted it, and so he carried it home, fed and petted it until it became quite tame and would go about the house like a little dog. Indeed, after a few weeks it grew so fond of its new home that it would not stay away from the house more than an hour at a time.

When it was let out of doors it would go to the rocks beside the sea—for the family lived near the seaside—and would slide down into the water and dive about for a while, catching fish. Then it would come back and climb up on the porch and lie there and cry to be let in. But one day he went out to get his dinner in the sea and that was the last ever seen of him. It was believed that he followed the tide far out into the ocean, and there met some of his old playmates, who persuaded him to stay with them.

Another story is told of a seal that resented an intrusion and whipped a monkey. This was a seal that belonged to a traveling show. After feeding the monkeys one day the keeper carelessly left the door of their cage open and in a minute they were out and swarming all over the menagerie. After an hour's hard chasing the keepers got the monkeys together again, all except Jocko, who would hang by his tail and grin just out of the keepers' reach.

At last they succeded in cornering him, and in desperation he leaped to the cage over the seals, at the top of which was the opening through which the seals were fed. Finding his pursuers closely upon him, he jumped into the cage and down upon the seals' platform. The big performing seal resented the intrusion and proceeded to catch the monkey, now thoroughly frightened, between the huge flippers, alternately slapping and biting him. The teeth of the thoroughly subdued monkey did not stop chattering for half an hour after he had been rescued from his plight.

Bright as the Fire.

When Crewe Hall was burning; the late Lord Crewe, father of the present earl, displayed a humorous equanimity which St. James' Budget deems worthy of preservation in print.

When the historic mansion, with its works of art, rare manuscripts, armor and other treasures, was blazing away, Lord Crewe ordered a footman to place a table on the lawn and bring him an inkstand and some telegraph forms. He then sat down and composedly wrote this telegram to Street, the Royal Academician:

"Dear Street. Crewe is burning; come and build it up again."

To his sister he sent another message by wire:

"You always used to say this was a cold house; you wouldn't say so if you could see it now."

Men Who Cheat Themselves.

I have known employes actually to work harder in scheming, shirking, trying to keep from working hard in the performance of their duties, says Orison Swett Marden in "Success Magazine," than they would have worked if they had tried to do their best, and had given the largest, the most liberal service possible to their employers. The hardest work in the world is that which is grudgingly done.

The youth who is always haggling over the question of how many dollars and cents he will sell his services for little realizes how he is cheating himself by not looking at the larger salary he can pay himself in increasing his skill, in expanding his experience, and in making himself a better, stronger, more useful man.

Some of the better grades of Mediterranean coral sell at wholesale in the crude state as high as $200 per pound.

Women's Interests.

Women's Part in World's Progress.

America has proven a pretty good place for women. In Virginia a good many years ago, we are told the planters bought their wives, good, estimable women brought from the old country, for one hundred pounds of tobacco each, and an inferior quality of the weed at that. Inside of two hundred and fifty years the descendants of those tobacco-bought wives have blossomed out into the Old Colonial Dames.

Helen of Troy was a beautiful woman and yet almost her entire time was taken up in creating dissensions in the army and with very little evidence of patriotism. Dido was a pretty woman and yet we are told she was capricious and coy and (if they had such things in those days) almost broke her husband up with her millinery bills. Cleopatra was a woman of beauty and influence, and yet, if the stories told about her are true, it would almost make a convention of Sunday School superintendents wild with rage.

There was a time within the last span of centuries when woman left those old ties and those old trodden tracks and started out on these new opportunities, writes Levi P. Goodale. We find on the pages of history the counterpart for the old historic women when we read of those noble women who have devoted their lives to the advancement of the human race. Take Dido, for instance, and what a striking opposition is there in Lady Henry Somerset, who devoted her whole life to the amelioration of the human race. What a striking opposition are the Booths, who gave their lives and every moment of their time to work in the slums; between them and Cleopatra of old. Elizabeth Fry, the friend of the black man; Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the sweet-voiced woman; the austere but upright Susan B. Anthony, and the gifted and genial Julius Gladdis, three noble women who devoted their lives and their money to the betterment of woman's condition, giving them opportunities both in the workshop and in the home. To-day there is no page written on the history of the world that has not on it the hand of woman, whether it be in the home or in the school, whether it be in the church or in the hospital, whether it be in the broad land, carrying forth light and education, or whether it be in the home of the Japanese mother, who gives her only child and herself for the cause of patriotism.

Happiness.

The sum of happiness is made up of a thousand details. A little kindness done to one less fortunate gives the heart a beat of pleasure that no millinery or laces or jewels can possibly inspire.

To overcome prejudice is more satisfying than a ten-course dinner.

To subdue a difficulty and smother a selfish desire is to become strong and splendid. If life is worth living at all, it is worth living in a state of progress and improvement.

If we moan and groan, filling the air with dissatisfaction and gloom, we can scarcely hope to partake of much contentment.

All you need is a good thump on the back by some cheerful soul who has faith in you, and a promise to yourself that you will face your work and your worries cheerfully.

Linen Blouse.

A very attractive blouse is this. It may be developed in either linen or shantung to be worn as part of a three-piece suit or with a coat suit of wool. It fastens at the left side of the front, and on either side of the broad center panel are two vertical tucks with space between for lace or embroidery. The sleeves are long and close-fitting and composed of groups of cross-tucks and embroidery. Across the front are strips of the insertion arranged in military effect, and each terminating at the closing with buttons covered with the goods. A pleated ruffle also trims this closing from neck to waist.

Heels Were Too High.

A California woman lost a suit for damages which she brought against a street car company because of having fallen in alighting from a car, on the grounds that the heels of her shoes were too high to allow her to step safely. Evidently, if the gentler sex will persist in following fashion to the extent of crippling and deforming themselves, that judge does not intend to make the railroad company responsible for the results.

Paste for Paper Hanging.

For use on very delicate paper, finest sifted wheat flour; for ordinary paper, dark rye flour. To make an ordinary pail of paste, two pounds of either kind of flour; mix with cold water, beating to a stiff paste until all the lumps are broken up. Then stir heaping teaspoonful finely pulverized alum into paste. Then stir into the mass gradually six quarts boiling water, beating the mass until smooth. Should paste on standing over night show separation of the water it may be boiled at low heat while being constantly stirred for 15 or 20 minutes. To keep from souring put in the quantity mentioned 30 drops of carbolic acid.

Current statistics show a notable increase in marriages in France.

Berlin has a divorce club with 300 members, all of whom are divorced.

Woman clerks outnumber the man clerks in the census bureau at Washington.

Dr. Clara M. Moore of Denver has just been appointed physician of the woman's department of the state hospital for the insane at Pueblo.

In Switzerland any woman wearing a hat with a diameter of more than eighty centimeters must pay for it as if it were a bicycle or a cart.

How many people know that Miss Elizabeth Marbury, the pioneer play broker and Sardou's representative, once ran a poultry farm? She earned her first dollars from chickens raised at Oyster Bay.

The woman school teachers throughout the country are looking longingly toward Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, as in these states woman teachers receive the same salaries as do man teachers.

It is estimated by a New York woman shopper that the time lost each day in one of the large department stores in waiting for change is equal to the time of one person for seventy days.

Mme. Henrietta Ronner, who died recently in Brussels, aged 90, had most remarkable eyesight, which she attributed to the wisdom of her father. He lost his eyesight when quite young and so required her to remain an hour each day at noontime in a totally dark room. She kept up the custom as long as she lived.

Three Priceless Possessions.

The three great priceless possestions in life as well as the most valuable bequests to posterity are declared to be good character, good health and a good education. A good character is an investment in honor and virtue, not for time only, but for all eternity. It is the first essential of citizenship, the foundation of every stable government, the key to success, and a synonym for happiness. But in order to make that investment yield the greatest benefits, we must have for our support good health, and for our constant guide, a good education.

Don't Worry.

The thin, angular woman is usually the nervous one, and the overburdened Martha who "takes her washing and ironing to bed with her." Worry and hurry are vices, and women who destroy the harmony of a whole household with their constant fretting and nagging are as wicked as drunkards. No woman can be healthy and happy whose face looks like a bottle of chow-chow.

Help Baby to Walk.

To teach baby to walk take a large muff, put baby's arm into it to the elbow. Baby will think she has a good hold on something solid and will start off. By doing this, if baby falls the arms are in a good position, for they will naturally fall forward and he will land on the muff.

To Stop Coughing.

If a child begins to cough at night raise the pillow slightly and lay him on his side. Then draw the sheet loosely over his mouth. This prevents the irritation caused by the cold air, and coughing will almost invariably stop.

Sending a Wedding Gift.

In sending a wedding gift, have it arranged as neatly as possible in a plain white box, unless the gift is contained in a fine box of its own. A tactful girl in sending a little trinket of silver will write a friendly note and mention the name of the article sent. The reason for this is that it assists the recipient in knowing just who sent certain gifts, also it is a help to those who receive an article for the table which looks like a cross between the golden gates and a hay rake, but when properly named is merely a cheese fork, yet a mystery to the recipient, who does not know whether it is a fish fork or a fancy can opener. Right in the midst of the favored gods and goddesses of society these puzzles occur.

Quaint Cap.

A quaint fad are the new caps used now by fashionable women for covering their tumbled locks before these are "dressed for company." For passing through the halls while visiting at country houses, or receiving the call of a physician, before my lady's locks have assumed the pads and puffs of the conventional coiffure, they are certainly useful and the height of coquetry. The one pictured is of all-over English eyelet embroidery, with ruffles of the same around the face and two lace motifs which hang over the ears much in the fashion of the Dutch national headdress.

Preserving Cut Flowers.

To preserve cut flowers, at the same time save changing the water, fill the vase two-thirds full of clean sand. Stick your roses or other flowers so they will remain just as you put them; then add water and see how much longer they will keep fresh. Sometimes the stems of roses and carnations will root in the sand.

The Beam in Thine Own Eye.

Very few women are ignorant fools, and when they are married to a man who is getting $1,500 a year salary and they are living at the rate of $2,000 a year, they know the money is coming from some illegitimate source. The woman who helps a man to spend more money than he is honestly making is accessory before the fact, and is every whit as guilty as if she put her hand into the cash drawer of the man he robs and took out the money herself. Women have spent much time in trying to reform men. Might they not with advantage turn their attention to the peculating propensities of their own sex? It is a disagreeable truth to hear, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that if there were more honest women there would be fewer dishonest men.

The next time baby screams with colic, instead of dosing it with soothing syrups or old nurse remedies, such as catnip tea and other decoctions to which our grandmothers pinned their faith, try what hot water sipped from a spoon or taken through a bottle will do to relieve the pain. The water should be fresh and boiled, but not boiling. Care must be taken that it is not hot enough to burn the delicate tongue and gums. This will usually give relief and can be repeated frequently with no danger to the child.

Monuments That Endure.

Monuments of marble and brass crumble into dust, but monuments built of good deeds, whose corner stone is love, will withstand the storms of time, and glitter in the sunlight of God's adorable Majesty, upon the shores of Eternity.

Camphor Disinfectants.

A good deodorizer is made by applying a hot poker to a lump of camphor gum in a saucer. The strong fumes will clear the atmosphere of a room in a few moments.

Tea Removes Fruit Stains.

When the fingers are stained from peeling fruits, dip them in strong tea, rub with a nail brush, then wash in warm water.

Soda Cleans Paint.

Common baking soda on a wet cloth will never fail to remove finger marks and dirt from white woodwork and white beds.

To Clean Glass Bottle.

Take warm water, with one teaspoon baking soda; shake it well, and you will find it cleaned perfectly.

Usually on Her Feet.

It is seldom that a woman wishes to stand up for her rights in a street car.—Chicago Record-Herald.

FOULARD GOWNS FOR SUMMER WEAR.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

William Rowan, aged 80 years, a member of the 140th Indiana Volunteers, died suddenly at his home, north of Madison.

George Zimemrman, aged 67 years, because he was nervous, hanged himself in his barn near Harlan. His body was found by his son.

The body of an unidentified man, believed to have come to Fort Wayne on a Sunday excursion, was removed from St. Mary's river in that city.

Ollie Kolb and Edward P. Downey, of Princeton, are entitled to the prize for the biggest catch of fish so far this season. At Long Pond they caught 241 croppies in five hours with hook and line and they assert they could have broken all records had they had more bait.

Perry Kinman, of Petersburg, found what he thought was a double-yolked hen's egg, but when he cracked the egg to prepare for breakfast, was astonished to find another egg, shell and all, perfectly formed, inside the larger shell. The white liquid of an egg was between the two shells.

Additions to the equipment of Culver Military Academy to cost nearly $300,000 will be made in the coming five years. Acting Superintendent L. R. Gignilliat announced at the commencement exercises work on a $40,000 mess hall and kitchen will be begun at once. Forty-five secured diplomas.

When George Webster, of Sandusky, Ohio, died about two years ago, he left a fine farm of 100 acres near Whitestown, to his wife and his brother, Henry Webster, one of the provisions of the will being that they should sink upon the farm a well in quest of oil. This provision will now be carried out.

Bowers & Son's wild west show, making small towns in northern Indiana, gave an entertainment to a good crowd at Wheatfield. When the show was leaving town a crowd of citizens who did not like the show appeared in the main street and cheered a lot of youngsters while they threw eggs at the show wagons.

For the first time in a number of years, with the exception of two hours, during the first month of Sheriff J. S. Stephens' administration, five years ago, there is not a prisoner in the Vermillion County Jail at Newport. Charles Reed, who pleaded guilty to larceny, was released on suspended sentence, and Jesse Howard was acquitted of the same offense.

A divorce suit has been filed in the Clark Circuit Court at Jeffersonville and from the complaint it appears that though the couple have been married nearly three years, the wife must have all that time been satisfied to use a term of endearment for her husband's name, for the very peculiar title of the suit for a divorce case is "Lulu Crittenden against W. H. Crittenden, whose true Christian name is to the plaintiff unknown." They have one child.

John Vaught, of Shelbyville, who is visiting his uncle, Wesley Pottorff, in Hartsville, took the latter for his first automobile ride recently. Mr. Pottorff will be 96 years old July 1. He has lived in Hartsville nearly all of his life, and in spite of the fact that he underwent a surgical operation not long ago which physicians thought he would be unable to survive, he recovered and is as well as ever. He has never used tobacco in any form and has never used intoxicants.

Grover Anderson, arrested at Goshen for desertion from the army, protested his innocence and proved an alibi. He had not enlisted for the period named. When shown a photograph of the deserter he said it was Lou Lynn, of Elgonier, a former comrade of Anderson's in the National Guard. Lynn enlisted at Elkhart, giving the name of Anderson. It is alleged he deserted from B troop, Fourth cavalry, at Ft. Atkins. An officer has been sent to Mishawaka to arrest Lynn, who, it is thought, is employed there. Anderson has been released.

During the Odd Fellows' memorial service at the Walnut Hills cemetery, Petersburg, a snake came near causing a panic among the large crowd of people who had gathered to attend the exercises. The marching column of Odd Fellows had just crossed the crest of a hill when a large blue racer was frightened from its hiding place in the grass, and in trying to get away from the marchers it raced down the hill into the crowd and endeavored to climb into a buggy in which was Misses Bessie Chew and Lillian Rogers. Twice the snake succeeded in climbing over the dashboard, but it was beaten off with an umbrella in the hands of Blythe Hendricks, city Councilman. The snake was finally killed by Thomas Harris, deputy sheriff. It was almost five feet long. The snake was as badly scared as the young women.

The first rattlesnake seen in Sullivan County for years was killed at the Blocks, near Farmersburg, by Mort Turner. The reptile was five feet in length and seven inches in circumference.

While bringing over a special car for the society people in Laporte to go to Michigan City to attend the annual June hop, Harold Young, conductor on the car, was killed. He was knocked from the car by a pole as he leaned out to put on the rear lights.

Terre Haute Shriners have received a charter for a temple. There are eighty Shriners in Terre Haute, and it is expected the temple will have 200 from nearby points, all of whom will leave Murat Temple at Indianapolis.

"I am going to shoot you, grandma," said the 8-year-old grandson of Mr. and Mrs. James Mastian, living near Linden. The boy then pointed the rifle at Mrs. Mastian and fired, the bullet striking her in the arm. The wound is not serious it is thought. Mr. Mastian had given the rifle to the boy to hold for him a few minutes.

Almer McCutcheon, a painter of Evansville, fell from the top of a three-story building and was fatally injured. His skull was fractured and he was injured internally.

While the 3-year-old son of Charles Youngman, of East Mt. Carmel, was playing around some timbers a heavy piece fell on the child's bare foot, slicing off the great toe.

Officials of the State Prison at Michigan City say the condition of Ray Lamphere is not more serious than it was six weeks ago and that he is not near death from tuberculosis.

Miss Ellen French, 18 years old, living near Evansville, said to be despondent over a love affair, committed suicide by jumping into a pond. The body was recovered by her brother.

At the home of John Harger, in Noblesville, he and his sister, Mrs. Jane Gray, of Iola, Kan., who had mourned each other as dead for fifty-four years, were reunited. They were separated when children, one going with the father and the other with the mother. Mrs. Gray recently heard a man named Harger was living in Noblesville, and he identified a juvenile photograph of himself which she mailed him.

Bad luck is pursuing the family of James Horrall, a prominent Hells Neck farmer. Mr. Horrall broke his arm in brushing away a fly on his nose by accidentally releasing a lever on a lifting jack which held up a wagon. Jerauld, a 16-year-old son of Mr. Horrall, suffered a broken leg when the horse he was riding tumbled into a ditch and fell on the rider. The boy was going to a revival meeting.

While a player piano in the parlor of Mrs. Harriet Miller's boarding house in Muncie was raucously playing "A Big Night, Tonight," burglars raised the rear window of the place, the noise of their movements being drowned out by the piano, and robbed the room of James Cashdollar. They carried away Cashdollar's clothing and several articles of value. The police who were notified could find no clew.

Herman Wendt, who was elected a member of the City Council at Peru last fall, to serve an unexpired term, has tendered his resignation, to take effect at once. He has come to the conclusion that a business man in Peru has no business being a member of the Council. At the present time, while the city's books are being examined by experts, people are promiscuously alleging city officers are dishonest. Rather than have his good name besmirched Mr. Wendt said he would quit serving on the Council. "I don't have to stand for it, and I won't," he said.

Convinced that Peter Sobeski, of Laporte, sent to prison for life for robbery, told the truth in his last confessions as to the identity of his accomplices in the robbery and blowing up of the Sonneborn sporting goods house, Sheriff Anstiss offered a reward for the arrest of Riley Stanton, aged 23 years, and Floyd Stewart, both of whom have served time in the State Reformatory at Jeffersonville, where Sobeski became acquainted with them. Stanton was sent to Jeffersonville from Indianapolis in 1903, for petit larceny. Floyd Stewart is a mulatto, 23 years old. He was sent to Jeffersonville from South Bend.

Oliver Bradley, who was taken to Michigan City after being convicted of killing his wife, was brought to Noblesville by Sheriff Mangus, and the prisoner took dinner with his mother. The news that Bradley was in the city soon spread and a crowd of more than 200 of his old friends assembled at the station to say farewell to him. He seemed to be cheerful and greeted all with a hearty hand shake. To several of them he insisted that he was not guilty of the crime of which he had been convicted. "I will tell you boys that an innocent man is going to the penitentiary," he said, "but I live in the hope that some day the truth will be known, and then I will be given my freedom. The parting with my mother a few moments ago was the saddest thing in my life."

Attired in men's clothing, her masquerade being so deceiving as to defy detection, Miss Sylvia Daily, 18 years old, who says she lives at Alexandria, was arrested by the police at Richmond in company with Clarence Wells, 21 years old, who also gave Alexandria as his place of residence. Miss Daily told a strange story to the police, one that is deeply romantic, but one which did not have such an ending as the girl's fondest hope had been. She said she and Wells were in love and decided to elope from Alexandria. They were practically penniless, however, and decided that in order to get money to launch their matrimonial ship that both should contribute their labors. Wells is a boiler maker by trade and the girl offered to don masculine attire and become his helper wherever he might find work.

Joseph Dayton, aged 34, of Bedford, having a wife and three children, was instantly killed at the P. M. and B. quarry by a wire guy rope which broke from its fastenings, striking Dayton in the forehead.

Owen Darling, the last survivor of the twenty-nine people who escaped from the burning steamer Golden Gate on the Pacific Coast at San Francisco in 1849, when the gold fever was raging, died at his home in Evansville last week at the age of 64 years.

Harry Phillips, once a prosperous lawyer in Chicago, was found guilty in the Porter Circuit Court at Valparaiso, of stealing two carloads of coal from the Lake Shore road at Chesterton. The penalty is two to fourteen years. Phillips handled his own case.

Norwood McEwen, son of Archie McEwen, who lives two miles southwest of Columbus, is said to be the "biggest boy" for his age in the county. He stands six feet one and one-half inches in his stocking feet and weighs 172 pounds. He has just celebrated his fifteenth birthday.

There is a city ordinance making a fine of five dollars (which together with costs would make fifteen dollars) for shooting firecrackers, torpedos and other kinds of fire works inside the city limits at any time excepting the Fourth day of July. If you cannot afford to part with that amount of money, you better put your celebration materials away until that date.

Eat What

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

Else you can't gain strength, nor can you strengthen your stomach if it is weak.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

But this food must be digested, and it must be digested thoroughly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today, and purchase a dollar bottle, and if you can honestly say, that you did not receive any benefits from it, after using the entire bottle, the druggist will refund your money to you without question or delay.

We will pay the druggist the price of the bottle purchased by you.

This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family.

We could not afford to make such an offer, unless we positively knew what Kodol will do for you.

It would bankrupt us.

The dollar bottle contains 2½ times as much as the fifty cent bottle.

There were six graduates, Dessie Smurr, Hazel Seltenright, Ernest Rose, of Wilmington; Loren C Bryant, Harold Coll, of Troy, and Myrtle Jennings, of Stafford, comprising the class. Mrs. Stage's orchestra furnished excellent music, and Clyde Blaker and Gladys Smith sang in their usual pleasing manner. The case of the state in the relation of Harry Hunt vs. Mayor Thumma and City Clerk Watson, of Garrett, was up for trial in the circuit court before Judge Bratton Saturday. The suit is on a writ issued at the instance of Mr. Hunt to allow an examination of the books and records of the city of Garrett. The attorneys of Mr. Hunt and the state are W. A. Campbell, of Fort Wayne, and C. S. Smith, of Auburn. The defendants are represented by City attorney D. A Brinkerhoff, of Garrett, and Judge Rose, of Auburn. All the testimony in the case was heard Saturday forenoon and the arguments of the attorneys made. It was after 3:20 before Judge Bratton gave his decision. He refused the demand of the plaintiff, Mr. Hunt to have the books and records of the city.

There's going to be a big talkfest in Indianapolis on the 30th day of June. The question will be, Resolved, That Prohibition of the Manufacture and Sale of Intoxicating Beverages is Right." Senator Proctor, of Elkhart, who was the leader for the repeal of the county option law in the last legislature, will represent the wet side of the debate, and Felix McWhirter, the prohibition leader in Indiana, will be his opponent. At first glance you may be at a loss to know why the "match" was arranged. But it is all plain enough when the rest of the details are told. Rev. Jeffords, a Peoria, Ill., preacher, is engineering the affair. He pulled one off in Peoria, and spectators had to come down with the cash, so that the Rev. Jeffords made quite a roll out of it, and he expects to do a good business at Indianapolis. It is claimed that there is some opposition to the debate on the part of brewers as they prefer not to stir up the temperance question at the state capital at the present time. It is expected that the debate will prove a great drawing card, as the participants are both able orators.

An interesting politic-economic conundrum is; "How does prohibition affect the glass industry?" In one of the glass manufacturing centers of Indiana the entire influence of the manufacturerers and the votes of the employes were, to the surprise of everybody, cast on the side of the "drys." The explanation of this action and the answer to the conundrum may be found in the statistical fact that the spread of prohibition increases the sale of glass bottles.

Senator Beveridge is quoted as saying that he will not talk state politics in Washington. If this is so, where does he talk state politics! He is seldom in Indiana. Since he has been in the senate he has paid only infrequent visits to the state which has honored him. When not in Washington he has been in the "Maine woods" or at a "summer home" in Massachusetts. He seems to have a special fondness for the New England climate. At all events, he sees his own state only on flying visits.

A stunt done by a stroke of lightning at Kandallville is a little out of the ordinary. William Friend had three horses in his stable and he had hung up a pair of horse blankets on a wire stretched across the barn and there was also a log chain hanging across the wire. The lightning hit the barn, crossed the wire, set fire to the blankets and melted a part of the log chain. The burning of the blankets was soon discovered by the family and fortunately there was no other damage done.

A novel solution of the wet and dry proposition has been hit upon by the German citizens of Franklin township, Harrison county, who, through their attorney, have petitioned the governor to have them annexed to Floyd county, which is wet, while they are forced to remain dry. The governor has turned the matter over to his counsel, Burt New, who has written that under the constitution of the state the governor is not permitted to practice law. It is not known upon what the plea for annexation to Floyd county is based, but Attorney Mayer, who has the case in hand, urges the change on the ground that the citizens do not desire prohibition; that Floyd has only five townships, while Harrison has thirteen.

An interesting marriage ceremony was performed Thursday forenoon at the county clerk's office—that united in the holy bonds of matrimony the hands and the lives of Mrs. Margaret A. Tarney, of Newville, and Mr. Wm. H. Worden, of Hicksville, O. The ceremony was performed by the bride's son-in-law, Rev. J. A. Kek, the pastor of the United Brethren church at Collins, he having accompanied the bride and groom to this city for that purpose. The groom, Mr. Worden, is a retired farmer, a man of means and prominence at Hicksville. The bride gave her residence as Newville township. For some time she has made her home with Rev. and Mrs Kek, at Collins. He is 75 and she is 67. Both have been married twice before, death in each case having separated them from their companions. Mr. and Mrs. Worden will reside on the farm of the groom near the town of Hicksville. —Auburn Courier.

Michigan City which, in the recent local option election in LaPorte county gave a substantial majority for the "wet" side of the question, now proposes by ordinance to limit the number and location of saloons. The plan is similar to the suggestion made on the legislature last winter when it was proposed to restrict retail places to incorporated cities and towns, limit the number in proportion to population, confine them to certain districts and increase the license fee. It seems to be undeniable that the old free and easy method of conducting saloons is a thing of the past. From now on the tendency will probably be, not further toward prohibition but toward really effective regulation and reduction.

As the final step in winding up the famous bankruptcy case of the Ellison banks of LaGrange and Topeka, Ind., the affairs of which have been in the bankruptcy courts the last five years, Referee in Bankruptcy Wood has set a date for hearing a petition of the trustee, Mr. S. K. Ganiard, of LaGrange, for an order to sell the remainder of the property of the bankrupt firm, which consists of notes, accounts and miscellaneous personal property. This hearing will be held July 1, at Fort Wayne and creditors are now receiving notices to that effect. The creditors thus far have received 30 cents on the dollar and will scarcely realize over 5 to 10 per cent. on this final disposition of assets.

The forerunner accident of the Fourth of July celebration has happened. It occurred Sunday forenoon, the victim being Stanley Holmes, a lad fourteen years of age, who today has the tip of one of his fingers and a part of one of his thumbs off, besides the palm of his hand being burned as a result of an accident while playing with fireworks. While his parents are away from home, having gone to Cuba, he is staying with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Lenz, on East Seventh street. Sunday he went over to a neighbor's to play. The children had firecrackers which they were shooting off and Stanley took the powder out of a couple of them and rammed it into a gun cartridge shell. In some way the "thing" went off with the result above mentioned. Dr. W. W. Swartz was called to the Lenz home and dressed the injuries of the boy.—Auburn Courier.

W. C. Delong met with a very painful accident last Friday while printing envelopes on a job press at the Record office. Dr. Shumaker dressed the injury.

Several of the southern democratic senators who voted with the Aldrich crowd on some of the tariff items are being bitterly condemned by their constituents. And what is more candidates for their seats are springing up in their states. The result doubtless will be that some of the recreant senators will lose their jobs and retire into a deserved obsurity. Such an ending would serve them right. The masses of the people of this country, and of every state in it, are opposed to the Aldrich schedules, which are arranged for (and by) the trusts and other protected special interests. It is especially true that all real democrats are opposed to the Aldrich proposals. The Dingley law was a legislative infamy, but the new one we are likely to get is certain to be even worse.

BIG GUNS TO PROTECT THE PANAMA CANAL

IT was a still tropic morning in 1920. The enemy's fleets, by prearrangement, appeared on both the Atlantic and the Pacific sides of the Panama canal at the same time. On shore there were no signs of activity; no indications that the enemy was expected, and although the officers on the approaching battleships swept the shores with their glasses they could perceive no fortifications. The sluggish tide of the canal carried on its bosom no vessels, for traffic had been warned that an attack was imminent.

As the vessels approached confidently on the Pacific side, with guns loaded and their crews at quarters, their commanders foresaw an easy task in forcing the canal entrance. When within twelve miles of the shore line, and under easy range of a group of islands that were like emerald gems set in a background of sapphire, there suddenly swept through the fleet a hurricane of shells. Many found their mark. Thrown into confusion, the flagship sought to ascertain the spots from which the hail of destruction came, but the tropic calm appeared to be unbroken. Before the vessels could recover from the panic into which the fleet had been thrown, a second volley swept them. Then they scurried back to sea, broken, and leaving two of their number drifting helplessly on the reefs.

Much the same reception met the enemy's Atlantic squadron. However, instead of facing a harrowing fire from outlying islands, the shots were delivered from the high hills that overhung the eastern entrance to the big ditch. The disappearing guns on shore, like those on the far side of the isthmus, were using smokeless powder, and it was practically impossible to discover their position. After firing a few desultory shots in reply, the squadron withdrew. The Panama canal had demonstrated that it was United States territory and that it would not be taken.

This imaginative picture, drawn by the Philadelphia Ledger, of what may happen a few years hence if there are attempts to capture the canal is not so much out of the way, provided the War Department carries out its present tentative plans in fortifying the ditch. These plans, of course, depend entirely on the willingness of Congress to furnish the money. It will cost millions to put the Canal Zone into the condition for defense that the department believes is necessary. On top of the vast sum that will have been expended before the first vessel passes through the waterway, it would not be surprising if Congress were attacked with a sudden and virulent spasm of economy when it is called upon to vote millions more to protect the work that has cost the nation more than a hundred times a king's ransom.

14 IN DISAPPEARING RIFLE, READY FOR FIRING

A MODERN 12 IN STEEL MORTAR

At the present time it is proposed to construct emplacements for batteries, fortifications, military posts and auxiliary batteries at a cost that will range between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000, exclusive of armament. For the outlying and principal batteries there will be sixty 14-inch rifles, capable of sinking the best battleship afloat once it comes within range. The minor batteries, which will protect mines and be available for repelling landing parties, have not yet been designated.

The 14-inch guns alone will cost upward of $17,000,000. Each cannon, of rifled steel, costs $53,000; the carriage adds $85,000 to this sum, and the total is increased by the addition of $150,000 for the emplacement. This totals just $288,000 for the big gun in position to fire, and the cost of sixty is a matter of easy mathematics.

These gigantic guns hurl a projectile weighing 1,650 pounds. The heavy projectile, of high explosive power, is effective at a distance of seven miles, and for anything less than the most modern battleships is effective at practically all ranges. Combined with the 12-inch mortars, which will also be installed, the combined main batteries on both sides of the canal will be able to fire at one single round a mass of metal far in excess of 100,000 pounds.

The greatest activity in fortifying the canal will be expended on the Pacific side. Lying off the coast some ten or fifteen miles are a group of islands. As a matter of fact, they number fifteen, but four have been selected as commanding the channel entrance, and these will be crowned with low-lying batteries, so skillfully constructed that it will be practically impossible to mark their presence from the sea. The huge guns within them will be mounted on disappearing carriages, and it will be next to impossible to locate their deadly presence except by the flash of their discharges.

The four islands selected are Flamenco, Culebra, Naos and Perico. The last named two are practically one and lie immediately behind Culebra, which, in turn, is shouldered out of a clear view of the sea by the bluffs of Flamenco. The arrangement of the quartet of islands, however, lends to strategic strength, for they are so situated that each supports the other, and, combined, they command the entrance to the canal on both sides.

In addition to the batteries of 14-inch guns the islands' fortifications will include mortar pits equipped with these 12-inch weapons of destruction. The mortars are sunk in pits, out of the direct range of shells, and have been developed to a point where they are highly thought of by the service. The mortars fire their shells in a great arc, the explosives falling on the enemy's decks, the most vulnerable part of a ship. When hits are made they are even more effective than a shell from a straight-shooting gun.

And the American gunner has mastered the art of handling the mortar. In the past the use of a mortar has been more to carry terror into the ranks of an enemy than in the hope of doing him any great physical harm. Now, however, the art of range-finding has been reduced to such exactness that recently a gunner in the Coast Artillery made a record of eight hits out of nine shots at a moving target, and that at a range of three miles.

The batteries of big guns and mortars on the islands will be reinforced by shore batteries at each side of the entrance to the canal. These batteries probably will be built on terraces, one supporting the other, and all commanding the channel. If any warship runs the gantlet of the outlying fortifications it will stand an excellent chance of being either sunk or disabled by the blaze of fire from the bluffs.

If by any miracle a foreign fleet does silence the forts on the Pacific side and attempts to work its way through the canal it will meet with a hot reception at Pedro Miguel, where strong fortifications will protect the first principal lock. These batteries will be so situated that they will be able to sweep the canal, and, as the ships perforce will have to proceed to the attack in single file, any fleet would be at the mercy of their guns.

On the Atlantic side of the isthmus the problem of fortifying the coast is comparatively simple. The ranges of steep hills that rise practically from the shore line lend themselves to the construction of batteries that will be able to sweep the adjacent sea. The batteries will be planted high enough up on the side of these hills so that they will be able to outshoot the guns of the biggest battleships and engage them before they can get within range. It is possible that there will be a series of these batteries, but all of them likely will be planted on Point Toro. This plan may be changed, however, so that secondary batteries will be built on the Colon side of the canal, and, possibly, a supporting battery back in the hills from the coast to cover the actual approach to the big ditch.

Like the fortifications on the Pacific side, the principal batteries on the Atlantic will mount both 14-inch guns and 12-inch mortars. There will be supporting batteries, naturally, but the location of these will not be determined until the position of the greater guns is decided.

In addition to the batteries and forts, there is to be constructed at Culebra a central military station in which will be kept stores and reserve troops and artillerymen. The station will be so situated that additional artillerists or supporting troops can be hurried to whichever coast is attacked. The barracks and storehouses will be of the most modern type, and will be protected by a complete battery, although none of the big guns will be mounted there.

The War Department has determined that every modern appliance of warfare will be installed on the isthmus if Congress can be induced to approve the plan for fortifying the canal. A half dozen electric power plants will be constructed with a view to keeping them out of the range of the guns of an enemy, and these will supply the power necessary for the operation of what are intended to be the most powerful searchlights in the world.

The arrangement is to be such that if one or two or three plants are disabled the searchlights still will have sufficient voltage to fling their rays out on to the ocean and pick up any enemy that may be seeking to rush the defenses of the canal under cover of night. These power plants also will furnish the power with which to operate the hoists and other appliances in the batteries and furnish light for the gun crews.

The plans for a complete defense of the canal, of course, include a system of submarine mines. These will be both contact and shore controlled. The latter class will be charted and their position known to the operator in the fortifications. Whenever a hostile warship enters one of the squares in which the death-dealing explosive lurks it will be discharged by an electric spark sent from the shore.

All of these plans, as has been stated, depend for their fulfillment entirely on the will of Congress. Congress willing, the canal will be fortified in a fashion that will make it almost as impregnable as Gibraltar. The United States will maintain complete sovereignty over the waterway it will build, and this government will ask no favors of any other nation in maintaining the integrity of the great work that was begun by the French and is destined to be completed by the American people.

SHAKERS PASSING AWAY.

Century Old Colony in Ohio Is Nearing Its End.

The United Society of Shakers, at Union Village, Ohio, is fast being vanquished by the hand of death, and the time is fast approaching when the organization will pass into oblivion. Plans are now on foot for the Methodist Home for the Aged, in Cincinnati, to absorb the society. Of a membership of 500 half a century ago there remain but 29 converts to the faith. Among these only two are younger than 50 years, and but five have not yet reached the allotted three score years and ten. It can be plainly seen that a dissolution is inevitable.

Rev. H. C. Weakley, president of the home, in a recent visit to the village, talked of taking over the few survivors and giving them comfortable homes in his institution the rest of their days, and at their death the property would come into the possession of the institution for the furtherance of their excellent work. The Shakers one and all are in accord with the movement.

It was in 1805 that the first missionaries of the Shakers came to Warren County from New Lebanon, N. Y., and a year later founded a colony that grew, prospered and faded into the century. West of Lebanon, upon 4,000 acres of Warren County's richest soil, these people lived and thrived. They created their own industries and fought their own battles for supremacy. Efforts have at times been made to squander this valuable land, but at present, under efficient management, it is financially in excellent condition.

WILLIAM LORIMER.

The Recently Elected United States Senator from Illinois.

Congressman William Lorimer of Chicago by his election to succeed Albert J. Hopkins as United States Senator from Illinois has again demonstrated that he is a politician of consummate skill. Senator Lorimer was chosen on the ninety-fifth ballot by a coalition of fifty-three Democrats and fifty-five Republicans after a contest that tied up the Legislature for over four months. The victory restores to him the Republican leadership of Chicago and Cook County, which he held for many years, and makes him a powerful factor in the Republican State machine.

Senator Lorimer was born in Manchester, England, but came to this country when a boy. He got a start in Chicago as a street car conductor and from that developed into politics. There as inspector of plumbing he progressed rapidly. By 1894 he had entered national politics, being elected to the House for the first of the seven terms to which he has been chosen.

For the last five years or so Senator Lorimer has been the ex-boss rather than the actual boss of Chicago and Cook County. His control was broken when Charles S. Deneen was first nominated for Governor in 1904.

The new Senator is about 50 years of age, and his private life is said to be above reproach.

FARM AND GARDEN

Farm Telephones.

In some parts of the country telephones are becoming very common. It seems that once a telephone is established in the family it is there to stay. Other sections of the country are very much behind the times in this respect, probably because no one has gone ahead with the preliminary arrangements.

A farm telephone is not only a great luxury, but it is fast becoming an absolute necessity. With the addition of more business to the farm every year and the scarcity of labor anything that saves steps is worth money. When you get accustomed to doing business over the telephone you realize its great value.

A short time ago I heard a farmer order 100 bushels of seed oats by phone from another farmer about ten miles away. He had seen a sample at the fair last fall and made the negotiations accordingly. The business was transacted in about five minutes while the farmer was sitting at his desk after reading his morning mail left at the box by the rural delivery man. It would have taken him all day to get his mail and drive to the other farmer and buy his seed oats.

But there is a social side to farm life that is fostered by the telephone. It often happens that a woman is left alone for the day and she can easily make arrangements to have a neighbor call and spend the time pleasantly, instead of feeling lonely. Then it is so easy to make social arrangements for evenings or to meet friends as occasion requires.

There are always people in a neighborhood who are public-spirited enough to go ahead with the necessary arrangements to establish a telephone service. Others should encourage them promptly by subscribing to the fund required. Everybody is benefited, because the arrangement is mutual in the neighborhood. — Agricultural Epitomist.

A Trap Nest.

The accompanying plan of trap nest is quite simple and can be made from a box of suitable size. It should be 12 or 14 inches square by 20 or 24 inches long. The slats should be nailed to a crosspiece about one-quarter the distance from the top. A couple of nails are driven through the box and into the crosspiece to swing on. Half way back, on the inside, a narrow piece of board is nailed, back of which the nest is made.

To set the trap simply raise the slats inward from the bottom 8 or 9 inches high and place a small stick under one of the slats. As the hen enters the door is raised off the stick, which falls to the floor. There should be about five slats for a box 12 or 14 inches in width, slats close against inch strip at bottom.

When Vegetables Mature.

The following list will show the gardener how long after planting the various common vegetables will mature their growth and be ready for use:

Bush beans	40 to 65 days
Pole beans	50 to 80 days

Water for the Chicks.

Take an ordinary baking pan and have the tinsmith rivet on an "ear" on one side for nailing to a tree. Have him also make a hole in the bottom in one corner, that the water can be let out every day and the pan be kept clean. Nail the pan to a tree about twelve inches from the ground, so the chicks can drink without getting into it with their feet. The birds will soon discover that it is a fine place from which to get a drink on hot days. Sometimes they find, too, that it is a convenient place for a bath, and this of course makes the water dirty. But it is not much trouble to refill the pan with clean water, and this should be done two or three times a day. Chickens and birds require a great deal of water, and they often suffer for lack of it. Don't neglect them.—Boston Herald.

Getting Even with the "Town Man."

We have a neighbor who has two cows and 104 hens. From these he sold eggs and butter amounting to $75 between Jan. 1 and May 1, 1908. While this is not such a great sum, it helps wonderfully when we consider that a large family had all the butter, milk and eggs they wanted at the same time. In this case there is just $150 between this farmer and the man in town. Where our neighbor took in $75 the town man had that much to pay out.—Missouri Valley Farmer.

Hog Cholera.

In the way of treatment the United States Bureau of Animal Industry has discovered a vaccine which saves about 99-odd per cent after cholera appears in a herd, and a larger per cent if vaccinated before the disease is introduced. Time will demonstrate the practicability of this method. The bacteriology department of the Kansas State Agricultural College is also working along these lines, but is not yet ready to announce anything but progress.

When symptoms of cholera appear in a herd, it is wise to dip the whole herd, disinfect their quarters thoroughly, give them a slight change in feed, and add to this about five drops of tincture of prickly ash for each hundred pounds of hog once or twice a day. The old remedy of wood ashes and salt is good in many instances. A little powdered sulphate of copper, dried sulphate of iron or charcoal given daily when the animals are not perfectly healthy frequently does much good. After all, the old adage, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, holds good here.

Saves the Fertilizer.

Fertilizer is expensive. By the old method of distributing it there was usually enough wasted to represent a pretty penny. Then came along a Virginia man and invented the hand fertilizer dropper. This device consists of an odd-shaped bucket, running to a point at the bottom and having a small opening there, through which the contents filters. A hinged valve, operated by a rod that leads to the handle of the bucket, controls the flow. The top of the rod is connected to a crossbar, which runs under the handle of the bucket. This bar is in close reach, and, when resting on the top of the bucket the valve is open. To close the valve the operator merely extends a finger and lifts the bar, thus shutting off the fertilizer. The valve flares at the bottom, spreading the fertilizer in a broad, fine stream. For small farms gardens and lawns this device is of great convenience, and is a money saver.

As Usual.

He bought a hoe, a rake, a spade,
Some little seeds to sow,
At last he got the garden made
And saw the green things grow.

He work'd the rows and beds each day;
Each little plant he knew,
And as he smiled and sweat away
Oh, joy; how fast they grew.

No floods came down to wash things out,
No frosts to kill or blight;
No neighbor's chickens scratched about;
No kine strayed in at night.

Each seed he planted did its best
And not a one did rot—
No other garden, East or West,
Such vegtables begot.

But still this man did not enjoy
These vegtables so new,
For every night a neighbor's boy
Stole what the garden grew.
—Puck.

Earnings of Good Cows.

To demonstrate that all the good cows are not confined to any one breed and to show that the net profit per year is from a good cow attention is called to the records of the best five cows at the Wisconsin experiment station as follows: Johanna, Holstein, 13,186.2 pounds milk, 444.96 pounds fat, average test, 3.62 per cent, net profit $95.31; Marcella, Jersey, 7,783.1 pounds milk, 442.33 pounds butter fat, average test, 5.68 per cent, net profit $80.01; Margaret, Guernsey, 8,652.7 pounds milk, 403.25 pounds fat, average test, 4.66 per cent, net profit $73.30; Christiana, Ayrshire, 9,037.4 pounds milk, 366.58 pounds fat, average test, 4.06 per cent, net profit $66.21. The cost of feed at market prices has been charged to each cow and the figures represent the sale of butter fat less the cost of feed. The skim milk, calf, and manure are products in addition.

The King System of Ventilation.

Ventilation for stables and barns is now regarded as one of the essentials to be provided for in construction. The King system as illustrated in the diagram consists of two sets of flues, one set to admit the fresh air, the other to furnish an escape for the vitiated air. The inlet or fresh air flues should be placed not more than ten feet apart and located in the exterior walls of the barn. The outlet may include one or more flues.

SHOWING THE VENTILATING FLUES.

Study Fertilizer.

A few simple fertilizer maxims are so important that they should be fixed in the mind. Per cent is only another way for saying parts in 100. Fertilizers may be direct or indirect in action. The former contains needed plant food, the latter enables the plant to get food from soil or air. Lime is not plant food under common conditions; it corrects a bad condition of soil—sourness—and unlocks soil materials. Sulphate of iron (copperas), sulphate of copper (blue stone), sulphate of magnesia (Epsom salts) and sulphate of lime (gypsum) are among these indirect fertilizers.

Scientific Small Farming.

An experiment from which much may be learned is being tried in Hungary. It is embodied in the new land bill, which is now coming into operation. The proposal is to break up 24,000 acres into settlements, which settlements will be subdivided into plots of seven acres each. But the interesting point is that in the center of each group of small holdings there will be a larger holding of not more than 666 acres, which will be in the hands of a capable and experienced farmer, who will set an example for the others to follow.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Potatoes with Cheese.

Pare and cut into small cubes enough potatoes to make a pint; lay them in cold water half an hour, drain and cook in salted water until tender. Place a layer in a buttered baking dish, sprinkle thickly with grated cheese, pepper and salt, with bits of butter and a little celery salt; fill the dish in this way, pour over a cupful of milk, bake fifteen minutes and serve hot.

Boiled Salad Dressing.

Take two teaspoons sugar, two teaspoons flour, one-half cup cream, one-half teaspoon both mustard and salt, two tablespoons butter and two tablespoons vinegar. Rub flour, seasonings and butter together. Add cream and cook in double boiler until hot, then add vinegar slowly. Add eggs slightly beaten and cook until it begins to thicken.

Eggless Ginger Snaps.

One cup of granulated sugar, one full cup of shortening—equal parts lard, butter and beef drippings, or one half butter and one-half lard—one tablespoon ginger, one-half cup cooking molasses, one-half cup hot water, one tablespoon baking soda, one teaspoon salt. Put soda on the molasses and pour on water and stir. Flour enough to roll thin.

Veal Soup.

Take a well-broken joint of veal weighing about three pounds and cover with four quarts cold water; boil gently for several hours, then add one-quarter pound macaroni, previously cooked tender, or a cupful of boiled rice, season to taste with salt and pepper, boil up once and serve.

Cracker Tarts.

Split common crackers in halves and soak them in cold water about five minutes. Drain water off and put one-third of a teaspoon of butter on center of each half. Bake in hot oven until nicely browned; then put a teaspoon of raspberry jam (or any kind of jelly) in the center of each.

Corn Saute.

Place the contents of a can of corn in a saucepan with a third of a cupful of butter and allow it to simmer for five minutes. Then add a cupful of cream, a dusting of white pepper and salt and a little nutmeg. Cook gently for a few moments, then pour into a hot dish and serve.

Cream Cake.

One cupful of maple sugar, one egg, one-half teaspoonful salt, one cupful sour cream, one and one-quarter cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful soda. Add the soda to the cream; when it foams add the egg well beaten, next the sugar and salt, last the flour. Bake in a quick oven.

French Dressing.

The ordinary French dressing is quickly and easily made. Mix in a small bowl three-fourths of a teaspoonful salt, quarter of a teaspoonful pepper, two tablespoonfuls vinegar and four tablespoonfuls olive oil. Stir until well blended.

Fruit Cookies.

One egg, one cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one cup of raisins, two-thirds cup of sweet milk, one teaspoon of cinnamon, one-half of clove and nutmeg, two teaspoons of baking powder and flour to mix quite stiff. Drop from spoon on buttered tin.

Jelly Roll.

One egg, one-third cupful sugar, two or three large spoonfuls milk, three-quarters teaspoonful baking powder, pinch salt, one-half cupful (good measure) flour. Put on jelly and roll while warm. Tin used 9 by 5½ inches.

Flour Polish in Kitchen.

You can polish your nickel kitchen utensils by rubbing them while hot with a soft cloth dipped in flour. If any flour remains around the handles it can easily be removed with a small brush.

Kettle Knob.

To replace worn out knob on tea kettle tid saw an empty spool in two and secure with screw the same as old one was. A half of spool also can be used for knob on screen door.

Prevent Biscuits from Burning.

Sprinkle salt on the bottom of the oven before putting in a pan of cake or biscuits and there will be no danger of burning.

Short Suggestions.

Wash the refrigerator every week with soda water and keep a saucer of charcoal in it.

Never throw away pea pods; they give a delicious flavor to the purees for the next day.

A roast of meat which is to be served cold should be wrapped in a cloth when it is put away. It keeps its flavor better.

After scrubbing potatoes to bake, grease them with lard, and the outer skin will come off like burnt paper when the potatoes are served.

See that clothes are thoroughly dried and aired after being ironed. Otherwise they will not smell fresh and sweet and white garments will soon become yellow.

Save the water in which rice is boiled, and let it stand until jellied. It makes an economical substitute for milk in the making of cream soups, patties and other dishes.

Pecan and English walnut meats chopped and halved and laid over the top of a pumpkin pie just before it goes into the oven makes fine seasoning, rich and well-flavored.

To clean batter from the cake pan let it harden in the pan and scrape out with a steel knife, or first grease the pan before making the batter. Pour hot water in cereal pans, place on the lid and steam the vessel and it will clean easily.

SOMETHING FOR EVERYBODY

Concrete is made from the refuse of a soap mill at Calcutta.

Oriental dye-makers obtain forty shades of yellow from the shell of the pomegranate.

Each American Fourth of July costs approximately, 500 lives, with injuries to 4,000 other merrymakers.

In Vancouver, B. C., turpentine is now being obtained from resinous woods by an electrical process of distillation.

The pineapple is proving the most important and valuable of all the fruits in Formosa. A single firm had an output of 350,000 tons last year.

There are in Great Britain 510,000 holdings of over one acre, of which 37 per cent are under fifty acres, whereas only 3½ per cent are over 400 acres.

Of late there has been an extraordinary development of service in fine, new, modern fast ships between South America and ports in England, Germany and Italy.

One kind of Mexican pineapple, known as the cayenne, is entirely free from spines, and the flesh is much more tender and juicy. These cost up to 75 cents apiece, and the demand is far ahead of the supply.

The city of Los Angeles has solved the pole nuisance to a large extent by providing a joint pole committee whose object is to eliminate unnecessary poles and cause the various companies to run their lines on the same poles. The committee has been at work for two years, and 10,000 poles are now being used jointly by the different companies.

This world's most powerful searchlight is now part of the equipment of the Connecticut of the United States navy. The great mirror is five feet in diameter and was made for the government in Germany. The searchlight will throw such a powerful stream of light that it will be able to detect a submarine or torpedo boat at a distance of ten miles.

Later information on the results of Lieutenant Shackleton's expedition to the Antarctic revealed much that was not discussed in the preliminary dispatches. It is now brought out plainly that the south magnetic pole, like the north magnetic pole, shifts its position. The discovery will enable geographers to revise the magnetic charts, and this will render navigation safer.

That the German government believes ships of war will be much bigger in the future is shown by the enlargement of the Kaiser Wilhelm canal, which is to be deepened at once to thirty-six feet, with provision for a later deepening, if necessary, to forty-six feet. The width of the canal is to be doubled. The new dimensions of the locks will considerably exceed those at Panama.

Justice Clark, of the Supreme Court, sitting at Rochester, recently had a word to say for people who go about public highways on foot. Addressing the grand jury, he declared: "The automobile is an institution which has come to stay. But the pedestrian was here first. He has certain defined rights. One of these is that he must be protected in traveling on the public highways. Careless, reckless and criminal operation of automobiles must be stopped."

From extended experiments that have recently been made at Macon, Ga., it has been found that a fine grade of paper can be made from pulp prepared from the okra stem, and a plant for making paper from this source is likely to be erected in that city at an early date. Okra is easily grown in the Southern States, and could be produced in large quantities as a paper making plant. The plant is an herb belonging to the mallow family, genus hibiscus. Its botanical name is hibiscus esculentus.

Measurements by scientists bring out the interesting fact that the American college athlete of to-day is a much larger man than his father was, and is constantly growing. The average height of the Yale athlete to-day is an inch and a half more than it was five years ago; he is twenty-two pounds heavier with three inches more chest development and forty-two cubic inches more lung capacity; the average height of the Yale athletes is now 5 feet 9.9 inches, and their weight exactly 170.5 pounds. At an examination of Harvard athletes Professor Sargent found that they were an inch taller and from four to five pounds heavier than were the students of thirty years ago.

The Bishop of London made some striking statements when he presided over the annual meeting of the London diocesan branch of the Church of England Temperance Society. He said, with reference to the great forward movement in the temperance cause in England which is to begin in the autumn: "I am not going to sit down, and I hope the society is not going to sit down, under a drink bill of $830,000,000. People are talking about the cost of Dreadnoughts. Let any school child reckon how many Dreadnoughts we are drinking every year. Then, again, sixty thousand of our fellow countrymen and women perish annually from strong drink."

An odd judicial sentence was brought to light the other day from a lot of musty old records of Ashe County, North Carolina. It was the formal judgment of conviction of one Carter Whittington on a charge of perjury, and read: "Fined ten pounds and the said Carter Whittington stand in the pillory for one hour, at the expiration of which time both his ears be cut off and entirely severed from his head, and that his ears so cut off be nailed to the pillory and there to remain until the setting of the sun and that the sheriff of this county carry this judgment immediately into execution, and that the said Carter Whittington be confined until the fine and fees are paid."

SORE EYES CURED.

Eye-balls and Lids Became Terribly Inflamed—Was Unable to Go About—All Treatments Failed—Cuticura Proved Successful.

"About two years ago my eyes got in such a condition that I was unable to go about. They were terribly inflamed, both the balls and lids. I tried home remedies without relief. Then I decided to go to our family physician, but he didn't help them. Then I tried two more of our most prominent physicians, but my eyes grew continually worse. At this time a friend of mine advised me to try Cuticura Ointment, and after using it about one week my eyes were considerably improved and in two weeks they were almost well. They have never given me any trouble since and I am now sixty-five years old. I shall never fail to praise Cuticura. G. B. Halsey, Mouth of Wilson, Va., April 4, 1908."

Why Railroads Are Narrow Gauge.

Why are all railroads built on the standard gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches? The makers of the first locomotives thought only of putting their machines upon the tramways already in existence, and from that followed a very interesting and curious result. These tram lines naturally had exactly the width prescribed by the strength of one horse. By mere inertia the horse cart gauge established itself in the world, and everywhere the train is dwarfed to a scale that limits alike its comfort, power and speed. Because there is so much capital engaged and because of the dead power of custom it is doubtful if there will ever be any change in this gauge. Still, it might be worse. If the biggest horses had been Shetland ponies our railway carriages now would only be wide enough to hold two persons side by side and would have a maximum speed of twenty miles an hour. There is hardly a reason aside from this antiquated horse why the railway coach should not be nine or ten feet wide—that is, the width of the smallest room in which people can live in comfort and furnished with all the equipment of comfortable chambers.—Atlantic.

WON'T MIX.

Bad Food and Good Health Won't Mix.

The human stomach stands much abuse, but it won't return good health if you give it bad food.

If you feed right you will feel right, for proper food and a good mind is the sure road to health.

"A year ago I became much alarmed about my health, for I began to suffer after each meal no matter how little I ate," says a Denver woman.

"I lost my appetite and the very thought of food grew distasteful, with the result that I was not nourished and got weak and thin.

"My home cares were very heavy, for beside a large family of my own I have also to look out for an aged mother. There was no one to shoulder my household burdens, and come what might I must bear them, and this thought nearly drove me frantic when I realized that my health was breaking down.

"I read an article in the paper about some one with trouble just like mine being cured on Grape-Nuts food and acting on this suggestion I gave Grape-Nuts a trial. The first dish of this delicious food proved that I had struck the right thing.

"My uncomfortable feelings in stomach and brain disappeared as if by magic and in an incredibly short space of time I was again myself. Since then I have gained 12 pounds in weight through a summer of hard work and realize I am a very different woman, all due to the splendid food, Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason." Trial will prove. Read the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Air-Going Cat Came Back.

A few days ago a big Angora, mascot and pet of the Standard Copper Company at Landlock, lay quietly sunning herself on a rocky pinnacle 2,200 feet above the sea level and near the mine works, when a bald eagle swooped down upon Madam Cat and carried her away, according to the Morning Oregonian.

The mine foreman was a witness to the abduction and intently watched the eagle and its prey as they soared over the mountain tops. The sad fate of the cat was discussed in the bunkhouse for three nights, when the sudden jangling of the telephone bell announced from a distance of two miles that the cat had come back.

Madam Grimalkin was a sorry looking sight. Her long hair was bisheveled and in spots her mutilated skin was bare. How far she was carried and how she escaped her captor she cannot tell. It may be she killed the bird. When the eagle swooped down and carried the cat away the mine foreman asserts both cat and eagle must have gone twenty miles, for both were lost to view only on account of the failure of vision to follow them further.

Busy Man in Maine.

The New York Sun has received from Machiasport, Me., an envelope which gives upon its face the record of a busy man—in fact, he must be about the busiest man in Maine. His activities are blazoned forth in this wise:

Dealer in General Merchandise
Gasoline Engines and Launch Supplies.

Justice of the Peace
Notary Public
and Trial Justice.

Real Estate Agent
Agent for Fire, Life, Accident and Health Insurance.

Correspondent for
The Associated Press.

It would seem that here was enough to keep even a man from Machiasport fairly busy, but it is not all. Turning over the envelope, the busy man's face appears, with the information in type of varying blackness, that he makes and sells balsam pills. These, it appears, are simply twigs from the fir balsam tree all ready to be stuffed into pillows.

Sometimes you may be told that there are other things just as good as DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills. That isn't so. Nothing made is as good as DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills for any ailments of the kidney or bladder, which always results in weak back, backache, rheumatic pains, rheumatism and urinary disorders. A trial of DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills is sufficient to convince you how good they are. Send your name to E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago, for a free trial box. They are sold here by Geo. W. Representative Cline, of this district, has introduced bills to increase the pensions of Amos H. Cory, John H. Kimmel and Sarah B. Smith, of Angola, which bills were referred to the proper committee.

Do the People Rule?

It can not be expected that the United States senate will adopt a tariff bill satisfactory to the people when it is understood that a great majority of the members hold their seats as the representatives of special interests. The Indianapolis News calls attention to a study of the senate made several weeks ago by the New York Evening Post. The Post found that there were twenty-seven corporation lawyers, twenty one bankers and holders of bank stocks, eleven manufacturers, nineteen holders of railway stocks, twenty-six holders of industrial stocks, six men interested in mines and nine interested in lumber. Twenty-two senators are counted as millionaires and only ten as poor men. Aldrich, by far the most influential of all the senators, is interested in many industrial enterprises; an associate of Ryan and the Guggenheims in the American Congo company, with vast rubber concessions; an associate in other things with his son-in-law, John D Rockefeller, Jr., and has interests in sugar, railroad and manufacturing. Senator Guggenheim, of Colorado, is interested in gold, silver, lead, copper, zinc and rubber, Senator Kean, of New Jersey, is interested in scores of companies, including a rope and twine company. And so on. With this condition in the senate and Joe Cannon lording it over the house the long suffering common man has small chance for relief.

It is said that President Taft is "determined to prosecute the sugar trust." That sounds all right, for the sugar trust ought to be prosecuted to a finish; but the trouble has been that the prosecutions started from Washington get no where There is usually a great flourish of trumpets, a sounding of cymbals and a beating of tomtoms, but the trusts scarcely receive a scratch in the judicial shindy that follows. Mr. Roosevelt thundered loud and long, but it was only in the index, and little better is expected from his successor. Perhaps, however, the people really don't want anything done to the trusts. Mr. Bryan was earnestly on the people's side—or thought he was—but Mr. Taft was chosen by the people and the trusts. We shall deserve what we get, whatever it is. It may be that some day the people will vote for their own interests. And then, again, maybe they won't.

Obituary

Samuel Brown was born in Franklin township, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, February 21, 1865, and departed this life at his home four miles north of Butler, Indiana, June 24, 1909, aged 44 years, 4 months and 3 days.

He was a son of William and Elizabeth Brown and the first one of a family of nine children to depart this life, leaving four brothers and four sisters to mourn the loss of a kind and loving brother. He also had a large number of other relatives, who share in this loss, and a large circle of friends; the father of the deceased having died March 14, 1898, and the mother March 5, 1908.

He was a dutiful son and remained in the old homestead until about three years ago, when he established his late and beautiful home where he and his nephew, Will Brown and family, have lived and they speak in great praise of his kindness in the home, and they also share in this great loss.

His sickness covered a period of about three months, but was not thought to be of a serious nature for more than ten days.

In whatever course we journey,
Sometimes earthly hopes will fail,
Soon or late our path will lead us
Down into the quiet vale.

Solemn shadows fold around us,
In that vale so still and low,
As from friends who stand beside us,
Slowly one by one we go.

When no human voice can cheer us,
As the light of time grows pale,
Jesus only can be near us,
While we tread the quiet vale.

Funeral services were held at Jerusalem church Sunday at 10 a. m., conducted by Rev. F. P. Overmyer, of Waterloo, Ind. Interment at Hamilton.

In token of respect the casket was beautifully decorated with flowers, and besides those furnished by the friends there was a rich offering from the K. of P. lodge of Butler of which he was a member, also a rich offering from the First National bank of Butler of which he was a member.

There was a large delegation of Knights in attendance and were joined by the K. of P. lodge of Hamilton at cemetery.

THE GRAVEL PIT CASE ONCE AGAIN

Taxpayer wishes a little space in the HERALD to reply to an article recently published in the Record.

In the article referred to the editor of the Record assumes that he was the writer of a former article published in his paper and not signed by any one He accuses taxpayer of ignorance for not knowing he wrote the said article and of cowardice for not signing his name to his article.

We wish to say we had the best of reasons for not signing our name and had a perfect right not to do so. It was not cowardice, but an idea that perhaps more good could be done if my name was not made public for the present. The editor may have written the article, but we do not believe he was the author of it. It does not seem possible that he would take sides in the matter in such a manner. But if the Record editor wishes to be held responsible for what he assumes he wrote we shall hold him for it. In this case bluff and ungentlemanly accusations will do no good. He must meet facts with facts and not try to dodge the question at issue. If the said editor can cite any statutory law or any court decision in support of "The Gravel Pit Management" about which we have written in our former articles we will yield the question and thank him for the information. If he can not do this he should hereafter hold his tongue and pen too, so far as this matter is concerned. He should also ask pardon for the ungentlemanly accusations he has made. We wrote as we did for the public good and perhaps for the good of certain officers too. We did not wish the lawful time of sixty days each year at $2 per day, relating to the time supervisors may work, interfered with as intimated by the Record editor. We want the roads made as good as possible, consistent with present conditions. As to ignorance of law and general knowledge it is possible that the author of this article has forgot more than the editor of the Record ever knew.

Wellman and Vanigman say that the destruction of the airship house means a delay of four or five weeks and they are uncertain whether or not it will be practicable to finish the new house in time to make the voyage northward this summer, but they are determined to make the best possible fight against the ill-luck which seems to have pursued the expedition. EDITH WOODILL KILLED IN BRAWL, SAYS LETTER

Supposed Murderer Dies in Fight with Posse or By His Own Hand.

WOMAN IS BLAMED FOR CRIME

Roberts, or Eastman, Declares Gage's Protege Was Struck Over Head with Wine Bottle.

Sensation after sensation has developed in the mysterious murder of Mrs. Edith May Thompson Woodill, protege of Lyman J. Gage, at St. Michaels, Md. The first was the death of Emmet E. Roberts or Robert E. Eastman, the supposed slayer, who was followed by a sheriff's posse on the Back creek at 1 o'clock Friday morning, and killed in a fusillade of bullets. Roberts died either by his own hand or the shots of the posse.

In his pockets was found a letter addressed to Miss Vinnie Braxcome, care Klaw & Erlanger, New York, in which the writer asks the girl to come to Maryland to take charge of his body and property, as he intended to commit suicide. Roberts added that he had been out in a boat with four other people, two men and two women, that all had been drunk except himself and one girl; that one of the women struck another over the head with a wine bottle and had killed her.

Mrs. Woodill's Eventful Career.

Some facts of the meteoric career of Mrs. Woodill, in whose brief life, love and romance played such a great part, have been related by an intimate friend of the slain woman who said they were told by Mrs. Woodill herself. Mrs. Woodill said she was born in Minneapolis about twenty years ago. Her mother, who called herself Mrs. Ames, died when she was about 3 years old, leaving her in utter ignorance of her parentage or forbears. Mrs. Charles H. Thompson, of McDaniel, Md., then took her and brought her up, telling her that she (Mrs. Thompson) was her mother's intimate friend, but never disclosing to her the name of her father.

When she was about 12 years of age, they went to Washington, where they lived for some time in the house of Lyman J. Gage, who took a great interest in her. When she was about 15 he sent her, with Mrs. Thompson to Paris, where she studied music, Mr. Gage paying all expenses. On her return from Paris she went to Boston to complete her studies, and while in Boston she was married to a Mr. Caswell, who was an osteopath. When she was about 17, she went to Baltimore to continue her studies at the Peabody conservatory, leaving her husband. She was known as Miss Edith Thompson, concealing her marriage from all but a few intimate friends.

In a very short time thereafter she entered suit against Dr. Caswell for a divorce. She left Baltimore Easter time a year ago, being engaged at the time to Harry Adams of Mount Vernon, N. Y. After a brief stay in New York she went to California, where in less than thirty days after her divorce from Dr. Caswell she married Gilbert Woodill, of Los Angeles.

During her residence in Baltimore Mr. Gage sent her checks continually, some of them amounting to $1,500, and when she was married to Mr. Woodill he gave her $5,000. At the time of her death Mr. Gage was also building her a house in Los Angeles, with the understanding that he was to come and live with her and her husband.

Story of the Murder.

A few weeks ago Mrs. Woodill left her home in California to visit at the home of Capt. Thompson. She was often seen in company with Roberts, who took her for launch rides on the river. On Saturday, June 19, Roberts told Capt. Thompson that Mrs. Woodill had gone to Baltimore and would be back in a few days. Suspecting that something was wrong, Capt. Thompson gave voice to his belief that the woman had met with foul play. Roberts heard of this and disappeared. A search was made for Mrs. Woodill's body and it was found in Back river, the skull crushed and the corpse weighted with an iron post. A search of Roberts' bungalow revealed a bloody bedroom, but everything indicated that the young woman had been killed outside and the body dragged into the room.

Where and under what circumstances Eastman and Mrs. Woodill met is not known, but both are said to have been immediately attracted to each other.

The alleged slayer of Mrs. Woodill was "Lame Bob" Eastman, a Wall street broker, who failed in New York last July with liabilities of from $150,000 to $200,000. He was a broker on the Consolidated Exchange. Eastman left the city and was arrested in Chicago on complaints made by persons who had lost money through his operations. At that time he said: "There was never a more complete failure than myself. Wall street never witnessed a more complete ruin."

Police Description of Chinese Wanted for the Killing of Elsie Sigel, the New York Missionary, and Chum Who Told the Story.

MRS. GOULD WINS HER CASE.

Granted Divorce and $36,000 a Year Alimony.

Mrs. Howard Gould won a sweeping victory in her separation suit against her millionaire husband in New York when Justice Victor J. Dowling from the bench granted her a legal separation and alimony at the rate of $36,000 a year, practically $100 a day. In voicing his decision Justice Dowling gave Mrs. Gould a clean bill so far as intoxication is concerned. He said that no proof of excessive drinking had been introduced by Howard Gould's lawyers.

The court intimated that Mrs. Gould under all the circumstances had been indiscreet in her meetings with Dustin Farnum, the actor, even though there were business relations behind them.

The decision of the court was that Howard Gould's abandonment so far as concerned the proof offered, was not only without justification in any degree, but without provocation. The only question which puzzled the justice was the amount of the alimony. He declared that the case was without precedent so far as he knew, the husband's admitted income being in excess of $750,000 a year.

The fact that Mrs. Gould had acquired $57,000 worth of jewelry at her husband's expense since the actual separation was taken into consideration by Justice Dowling. He told Howard Gould that if his wife returned to the stage, an event that he did not think likely, Gould could reopen the case with an application to have the alimony decreased.

DEATH OF SARAH ORNE JEWITT

Well-Known Novelist Passes Away in Maine at the Age of 59.

Sarah Orne Jewett, the well-known novelist, died in South Berwick, Me., Thursday night after a long illness from apoplexy and paralysis. She was 59 years old. She died in the house in which she was born, which has been in the possession of the Jewett family since 1740. It is a fine old colonial mansion and has welcomed within its doors many of the literary celebrities of this country and Europe. Miss Jewett's first novel, "Deephaven," was published in 1877. After that she brought out about a dozen successful stories, the last one, "The Tory Lover," appearing in 1901.

Prior to his sailing for Europe President Gompers gave to the press a formal interview or message to the American public on behalf of organized labor. He said he would carry with him the ideal of a world-wide movement on the part of the workers to get their rights. The time was past when "Van Cleave can intimidate unionism." They would demand a solid "square deal," and would get it by force of organization and by international fraternity."

BOMB EXPLOSION IN CHICAGO.

Seven Persons Are Injured and Damage Aggregating $150,000 Done.

With an explosion which wrecked the rear of the Chicago Title and Trust Building, 100 Washington street, and damaged every structure in the block bounded by Washington, Clark, Madison and Dearborn streets, and the Boston store, the series of gambling bomb outrages in Chicago Sunday night reached its climax. Seven persons were injured and a loss of $150,000 was caused. In the series it was bomb 31. In destructiveness it exceeded the loss of all the other outrages combined. The explosion, which occurred at 11:20 p. m., resounded like a thunderclap and was heard all over the downtown district. The nearby streets were filled with pedestrians, who were showered with the glass which came pouring down from windows for blocks around. Many were hurled to the ground by the force of the blast.

The dynamite, which the police officials are convinced was the explosive used, evidently was placed in the alley at 111 Madison street. The room used by Mont Tennes, "king of gamblers," as the base of operation from which all his syndicate business was conducted and as his clearing house, was on the second floor just above the place where the fuse had been set off. At the opposite side of the alley is the Title and Trust Building, which houses the Central and Randolph exchanges of the Chicago Telephone Company. The full force of the blast struck the manhole of the main cable vaults leading to the exchanges, and twelve of the cables, each containing hundreds of subscribers' wires, were snapped apart like thread. Thousands of telephones in the loop district were put out of service.

The wreck and ruin wrought by the explosion were terrific. Heavy steel gates at the rear of the Title and Trust Building were twisted as if made of straw. A heavy sheet iron ventilator pipe five feet in diameter, leading from the kitchen of Thompson's restaurant, was crushed like an eggshell. Many large plate glass windows on the west side of the Boston store facing in Dearborn street were blown out, while within straw hats on their frames were undisturbed. Assistant Chief Schuettler laid the outrage to labor troubles.

TUCKERS AGREE TO DIVORCE.

Wife to Get $20,000 Property and Charge Colonel with Desertion.

An agreement in the domestic difficulties of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Logan Tucker, daughter of the late General John A. Logan, and Colonel William F. Tucker, U. S. A., retired—delayed, it is said, because of differences regarding the amount of money Mrs. Tucker was to receive in lieu of all alimony—has been reached, which will result in the latter applying for divorce on the ground of desertion.

When Colonel Tucker learned that the name of Mrs. Myrtle Platt had been dragged into the case, it is understood, he let it become known that if any further charges were made against him he would retaliate. Fearing that these charges and threatened counter charges would result in a bitter court struggle and notoriety, it is said, Mrs. John A. Logan brought sufficient pressure to bear to bring about an amicable settlement. Under the terms of the agreement, according to friends of the Tuckers, Mrs. Tucker will receive property valued in excess of $20,000.

JURY CONVICTS A. P. HEINZE.

Brother of Copper King Found Guilty of Impeding Justice.

Arthur P. Heinze was found guilty in New York of impeding justice by inducing a clerk in the employ of F. Augustus Heinze's $80,000,000 United Copper Company to evade a subpoena issued by the United States grand jury investigating the actions of F. Augustus Heinze as president of the Mercantile National Bank of New York.

The penalty for the offense is $500 fine or three months in jail, or both. Sentence was suspended until the October term of court on the promise of the prisoner that he would do all in his power to produce for the grand jury the books of the United Copper Company which he admitted he had caused to be removed from the office of the company at No. 74 Broadway. He began that task by going before the grand jury and telling where he sent the books and all he knows of their whereabouts and the mutilation of them.

$250,000 PITTSBURG FIRE.

Police Hunt Incendiaries—Hotel Guests in Panic.

A quarter million dollar fire occurred in Pittsburg Monday night, but in a district which caused fear for a time that twenty times that amount would be lost. The Arrott Power Building on Penn avenue in the heart of the downtown district was burned out, and about twenty firms which had offices there are homeless. The fire caused a panic at the Colonial Annex Hotel, adjoining the fire on the rear, and hundreds of guests who had retired early hurried out in their night clothing. There is a rumor that the fire was of incendiary origin.

Work of Congress

By a vote of 46 to 30 the Senate Tuesday took hides from the free list, where they had been placed by the House, and gave them a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem, the same as under the Dingley law. Just before adjournment for the day at 7 o'clock Senator Aldrich, on behalf of the finance committee, presented the committee's new lumber schedule and also a number of amendments relating to linoleum and oilcloth. The committee proposed a rate of $1.50 per thousand on sawed lumber, which is a 50-cent increase over the House rate. Neither the lumber nor linoleum schedule was acted upon. The House was not in session.

:—:

The Senate made short shrift of several provisions in the tariff bill Wednesday. An amendment for "dollar lumber" was defeated, as was a move for free lumber, and the finance committee's proposition for $1.50 a thousand on sawed lumber was adopted, 24 to 44. The finance committee's provision reducing the House rates on pineapples to the old Dingley schedule was defeated, and Senator Tallaferro's amendment raising the rate above that in the House bill was adopted. Senator Aldrich's committee won a fight on their coal rates, which lowered the House rate on bituminous coal from 67 to 60 cents a ton and eliminated the reciprocity clause. Attempts were made to lower the rate still further and to have coal free, but were defeated. The House was not in session.

:—:

The Senate Thursday adopted amendments to the tariff bill increasing the duty on shoes from 15 to 20 per cent ad valorem and on sole leather from 5 to 10 per cent. The greater part of the session was devoted to speech making. Senator Beveridge, advocating his amendment in regard to the size of tobacco packages, declared the tobacco trust was making millions by keeping packages down to war time sizes notwithstanding the war tax was long ago removed. Mr. Bailey and Mr. Newlands discussed the tariff at length. On the eve of the expiration of the current fiscal year the House authorized an emergency appropriation of $10,000,000 for defraying the expenses of the thirteenth decennial census. In presenting the bill for that purpose Mr. Tawney, chairman of the committee on appropriations, explained the situation with respect to the permanent census measure still in conference and announced that unless the money was forthcoming the census bureau would be compelled to suspend all business Wednesday. To get the members for this vote the sergeant-at-arms and his deputies scoured the capitol under orders of Speaker Cannon. Members reached the chamber in droves. About eighty of them were found comfortably seated in the Senate listening to the tariff debate. Adjournment was taken until Monday.

:—:

The Senate Friday raised the duty on scrap iron from 50 cents, as fixed in the House bill, to $2.50 a ton, increased the duty on wire nails one-quarter of a cent a pound and substituted specific for ad valorem rates on files, rasps, etc. The duty on harness was raised from 35 to 40 per cent. The increase on scrap iron called forth vigorous protests from several Western Senators, but was ordered by a vote of 42 to 28. Senator Penrose's amendment for a duty of one-half cent a gallon on crude oil was voted down. The House was not in session.

:—:

Although it devoted almost eight hours to strenuous effort in that direction, the Senate Saturday failed to conclude its consideration of the schedules of the tariff bill, and when at 5:15 o'clock an adjournment was reached there were still a number of important rates to be determined. The day, however, was full of achievement, and a number of provisions were disposed of. Among the more important questions which received attention were agricultural implements, wood pulp, cash registers, lithographic plates, laces and jute yarns. Wood pulp was placed on the free list, but the attempt to put agricultural implements in the same category failed. Senator Beveridge's amendment to cut in two the duty on cash registers was defeated. Other changes made during the day were as follows: Increasing to 2 and 4 cents a pound the duty on hemp, providing for the free importation until 1912 of linen manufacturing machines, increasing to the extent of about 10 per cent over the present law the duties on laces and embroideries, imposing a duty of 50 per cent on engraved lithographic plates, slightly decreasing the duty on jute yarns, striking from the free list the products of petroleum and eliminating the House retaliatory provision regarding wrapper and filler tobacco. The House was not in session.

SCORES KILLED IN EXPLOSION.

Terrible Disaster at Wehrum, Pa., Fire Sweeping Entire Coal Mine.

A terrific explosion occurred at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning in the mine of the Lackawanna Coal and Coke Company, located at Wehrum, Pa., about seventy-five miles northeast of Pittsburg. Between 100 and 150 men are known to have entered the mine shortly before the catastrophe happened, and at 10 o'clock, when only a few of them had reached the surface, the greatest fears were expressed that many of those in the pit had perished.

The few men who escaped from the mine were burned and blackened, indicating that the force of the explosion was heavy. None of them were in condition to give details, but from one it was learned that the explosion seemed to strike every portion of the mine simultaneously. Three men, seriously burned, who succeeded in reaching the surface are: Al Johnson, son of Superintendent Johnson of the mine; Patrick Burns and William Burns. When Johnson and the Burns brothers succeeded in escaping from the pit they stated brokenly, while suffering the greatest agony from burns, that the explosion was a bad one. It appeared to them that the explosion had taken place throughout the entire mine and that every one at work underground, for a moment or two, seemed to be paralyzed. With the explosion there seemed to be a flash and then all was darkness. Pitiful calls for help and groans were heard by the three men as they made their way to the entrance, staggering and falling over the bodies of comrades who had succumbed with the first shock.

As soon as it was known that an accident had occurred at the mine, the greatest excitement prevailed both at the mine and in the little hamlet, a short distance away. Wives, mothers, sisters and brothers rushed to the mouth of the mine tearfully begging for news as to the fate of their loved ones. A number of the foreign women, screaming and crying, tried to rush into the dark pit of death.

Superintendent W. N. Johnson of the mine, when questioned, said: "I do not want any exaggeration of reports published as to the facts, which in themselves will be bad enough. The explosion from some unknown cause seems to have been worst in a portion of the mine that we recently opened up. We think the death list will be a long one and the list of those injured much larger. Owing to the excitement prevailing, we have been unable to get details, but we are doing our best."

ROYAL SPANISH PRINCESS BORN

Consort of King Alfonso Gives Birth to a Daughter.

Queen Victoria of Spain gave birth to a daughter at 6:25 a. m. Tuesday. The booming of fifteen guns announced the birth of a girl and the rejoicing thereafter was general. Half an hour later the king, accompanied by the mistress of the robes, his face beaming with joy at the happy deliverance of the queen and the fulfillment of their wish for a daughter, proudly presented the infant to the dignitaries assembled in the antechamber. As the baby nestled in the basket which was richly adorned with exquisite lace, it was seen that she was a blonde and healthy in appearance, although smaller than her brothers. The first two children are boys, Prince Alfonso, born

May 10, 1907, and Prince Jaime, born June 23, 1908. The eldest, the heir to the throne, is fair like his mother, but he has the protruding lips of his father, a pronounced characteristic of the Spanish Hapsburgs. The second son, on the other hand, is dark-complexioned and looks the real Spaniard.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The bank statements show the aggregate resources nearer the $1,000,000,000 mark than at any time hitherto, and the otherwise favorable condition of the principal items reflecting financial strength testify to distinct progress in business generally. The first half of the year is now virtually completed. A comparison with the same period of last year discloses gains in payments through the banks equal to 19 per cent, in bank resources 12 per cent, in deposits 12.8 per cent, in loans 13 per cent, in value of new buildings 77 per cent and in value of business improvements 21½ per cent. Commercial failures are also notably reduced in numbers, and in liabilities the amount is 33 per cent under 1908 and 52 per cent under 1906.

"All the comparisons with the great business year of 1906 exhibit more substantial gains except discounts at the banks, which appreciated 12.2 per cent. The more recent comparison also includes recovery in values of various commodities and remarkably high quotations in breadstuffs, live stock and provisions.

"The current developments continue along the line of sustained recovery. The warm wave stimulated leading retail lines to seasonable activity, sales comparing favorably with previous records in light-weight apparel, food products and housewares. Advices from the interior reflect a gratifying reduction of store stocks and some moderate replenishment. Wholesale bookings for fall deliveries continue rising in dry goods, footwear, clothing, men's furnishings, carpets and draperies. Earnings of the Chicago steam roads indicate sustained improvement in the movements of heavy materials.

Bank clearings, $250,960,473, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 20.6 per cent and compare with $237,547,969 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 19, against 26 last week, 32 in 1908 and 20 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 9 last week, 9 in 1908 and 5 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement is more manifest this week, the mainspring of this being better weather and crop reports and further expansion in the volume of industrial operations. Retail reports are still rather irregular, excessive heat being credited with retarding distribution in some sections, but, on the whole, sales of summer goods have been benefited by more seasonable temperatures.

Jobbing trade reports are slightly better, pointing to an improvement in re-order demand, but by far the best reports as to distributive trade still come from wholesale lines, which represent crop reports stimulating the placing of business for next fall and spring delivery. The industries led by iron and steel show expansion of operation, larger output, some wage advances, and more confidence is expressed than at any preceding time since the depression began. The situation in leather trades is one of great strength.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with June 24 were 225, against 213 last week, 258 in the like week of 1908, 150 in 1907, 146 in 1906 and 186 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 30, which compares with 28 last week and 31 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

A Hazard of Hearts

By ALIX JOHN

Copyright, 1900, by Frank Leslie Publishing House

Miss Thorne sat watching the rise and fall of the railing against the purple horison line, apparently feeling herself quite free from any necessity for conversational effort.

It was only after some minutes' silence that Mr. Stewart spoke abruptly, "I wonder if you would consider me very impertinent if I were to tell you that I have been pumping the captain about you?"

"About me?"

"About your circumstances; your history."

She turned her gaze now to meet his fixed scrutiny, but her voice as she answered was but little changed from its usual calm indifference.

"Oh, I suppose that is the usual way with people at sea. There is so little else than out neighbors to talk about, you know."

"Then I am to stand convicted of idle curiosity?" And there was an echo of disappointment in his voice.

"Oh, no, we will call it by the more polite name of kindly interest, if you choose," she scoffed. "And may I ask if you found anything amusing or instructive in the facts which you elicited?"

He saw now how she meant to take it, and was ready for her.

"Well, perhaps amusing is hardly the word."

"Thrilling, then? Surely you consider it thrilling, the story of the virtuous orphan reared in the lap of luxury, but left to look out for herself in the world, with a sufficient, or rather insufficient income to keep her in a state of genteel starvation, and bravely setting out to devote herself to art, and to scale the ladder of fame—that is what you heard, isn't it?"

"Well, something like that," he admitted.

"You did not hear, I suppose," she went on, with a concentrated bitterness in her voice, "that that same heroine had no illusions left as to that same art life that she was going to; that she knew the limitations of her poor little skill, and looked to nothing but ill-rewarded drudgery; that she was well aware what art life in Paris meant to gently bred Englishwomen; that she loathed its shabby Bohemianism, its isolation from all that she had ever been or cared for. That, I suppose, you did not hear?"

"No," he answered, thoughtfully, "No, but perhaps I guessed some of it."

"I wonder what else your inquiries brought out?" And in her words he could feel the restrained eagerness.

For all his studies impassiveness, her quick eyes read the answer in his averted gaze.

"I see. You heard how the man whom I was on the point of marrying, backed out when he found I was not the wealthy heiress of his imagination."

"Yes, I heard that," Stewart slowly admitted. She laughed with that hard little laugh which he had already heard that day.

"Well, then, I think we may consider that you are now in possession of the main fact of my history. That being decided, you will perhaps tell me why you have so carefully led me into giving a sketch of myself. Or, perhaps you merely wished to impart a Christmas tale atmosphere, suitable to the occasion. People in Christmas tales invariably confide their past sorrows to the first person they meet, don't they?"

Mr. Stewart stood these taunts with imperturbability.

"I must confess that the Christmas tale theory did not occur to me," he said, "but perhaps you will allow me to go on with my line of argument, and you shall see what I am driving at, presently."

He paused, and his listener murmured a polite "Certainly," while a puzzled curiosity began to dawn in her eyes.

"It is acknowledged, then, that I, by forgiven methods, am acquainted with the main fact of your recent history. Now, may I put another personal question, and ask if you have, through the gossip of the ship, learnt anything of mine?" He put this question with the most matter-of-fact gravity, but Miss Thorne stared and laughed, and even flushed a little before she answered.

"Really, I do think that your system of polite conversation is, to say the least of it, peculiar."

"There is method in my madness. Have patience with me. Won't you answer my question?"

"I certainly cannot plead guilty to having put the captain through his paces about you; but if it is any satisfaction to you to know, Captain Kerr did make you the subject of a discourse one afternoon."

"To which you scarcely condescended to listen, I suppose. No matter. You must have gathered the main fact, that I am the latest edition of the Prodigal Son going back to my feast of veal! Pah! I always loathed veal."

There was a silence, while he scowled out at the ever changing curve of the long waves, and she watched his face with a new touch of interest.

With a start he roused himself. "You heard that, of course?" he asked.

"I heard that, in consequence of your eldest brother's death, you are going back to take your place as heir to your father's estates and baronetcy."

"Perfectly correct. But perhaps you did not hear that I am going back to a home from which, ten years ago, I was relentlessly driven out. There was no pity for the young fellow of 25 who had come a cropper on the turf. He might not even exchange into a line regiment and have another chance in life. No, he must go forth into those outer regions where there is 'weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth' among such as he and worse—Matabeleland jungles, Klondike mines—what matter where they go or what they do, so long as they never trouble again the virtuous ones at home.

"So I went; and when, the other day, their messenger reached me, it was to find me in possession of one of the tidiest ranches on the Saskatchewan. How I worked!—heavens, how I did work before the opening up of the country brought me prosperity." He looked down reflectively at the lean, brown hands that had stood him in such good stead.

"But it is hardly fair, in my innings, to burden you with such detail. I only wished you to understand the humor in which I am doing this home-coming. My mother, God bless her, was dead long before my smash-up. It was my brother's wife, I firmly believe, who made my father so pitiless towards me. With what a bad of iron she ruled those two men! I fancy that she rules my father still, more than ever probably since he has had a paralytic stroke. Well, she and I shall meet again next week!"

He seemed to dwell on the thought with sullen menace as he tugged at his moustache.

Miss Thorne looked at him with a new sense of comradeship.

"Fate has dealt hardly with you," she said, "and yet your troubles may be over now."

"While yours are just beginning," he retorted quickly. "But that is beside the point. What I want to prove now is that you and I look on the world from the same standpoint. We have no ties, owe nothing to anyone, claim nothing from anyone. That is so, is it not?"

"As far as I am concerned it is," she agreed.

"Your prospects are such that almost any change would be an improvement."

"Oh, no; I might become blind, or lose the use of my limbs."

In spite of a growing nervousness, she was attempting to maintain her former scoffing manner.

"We won't take those possibilities into account at present. My prospects, on the contrary, are what might be termed brilliant."

"I trust that the contrast you draw adds to your satisfaction in them," she said, with a touch of pardonable petulance.

"Now, I wonder what you would say if I were to ask you if you were willing to share these prospects as my wife?"

A startled impulse turned her face toward his, but she only met an intense scrutiny and restrained earnestness. He was certainly not jesting.

"I should say that you were suffering under a momentary aberration of intellect," she retorted, her voice sharp with wounded pride. "Perhaps you are not aware that Captain Kerr also informed me that you had a wife in the Northwest."

An unruffled calm greeted this announcement, which Miss Thorne had expected to be crushing.

"Oh, he did, did he? That's not playing fair. You should have told me that you had heard that. Well, I was just going on to tell you about it."

Miss Thorne's astonishment was apparently too deep for words, so she remained silent, only sending one hasty glance to measure the distance between her and the shuffle-board players, in case of the apparent lunatic becoming violent. Was there anything which his quick eye did not take in?

"Don't be alarmed," he said, soothingly. "Really, I am not one of the returned lunatic ranchers." Then with a short laugh: "It is solitude that works the lunacy business, and I have not suffered from that. Look here"—and he bent forward towards her, leaning one elbow on the deck—"will you promise me not to misunderstand me and fly off at a tangent of virtuous horror at what I have to say? On my honor, I only mean you well. You believe it, don't you?"

From under the shaggy pent-house of his fur cap his eyes looked up at her with a novel touch of pleading in them. She drew a long breath and waited a moment before answering, half reluctantly, as though held in the grasp of his stronger will.

"Yes. Somehow, I think that I do, although I don't in the least know why I should."

He answered, with the doubt gone from his voice:

"As long as you do, the rest doesn't matter. I am afraid, though, that I must go on being autobiographical. I hope it won't bore you very much. Here, let me put this umbrella up behind you to keep off the wind."

And with a dexterous movement he had erected a screen between themselves and the shuffle-board group, which in the course of the game had come close behind the corner.

The sea-gulls screamed and wailed overhead. The thud, thud of engines and screw went on as ceaselessly and remorsely as the wheels of fate, and it was to these accompaniments that James Stewart told his tale.

CHAPTER III.

"You must remember," said Stewart, "that I don't come from the fashionable Northwest—the Northwest with a supply of English wives and American paper novels and C. P. R. globe-trotters. I regret to say that my regions, away up on the Saskatchewan, are much more the genuine article, undiluted by any such alleviations. If ever I had any visitors they were mostly lumbermen. I daresay that you may have caught a passing glimpse of such beings—enough to know what brutes they can be."

"I have seen them in the Ottawa streets, when they come down in the spring. They seemed more like wolves than human beings."

"Yes; they are pretty wolfish. Well, it was my fate, one fine evening, to have ridden into the riverside settlement just as a lot of these same brutes had got on a most tremendous spree to celebrate their home-coming. Most of them were taking it jovially; but one had struck out on a line of his own, and when I passed his shanty was knocking about his poor little half-breed wife—a big-eyed little woman who, once or twice, when I had had a stress of laborers on hand, had come out and cooked for me.

"She came shrieking out into the road, with the brute after her, and it wasn't in human nature to resist the impulse to jump down and give him something in return. Although he was pretty drunk, he was able to make some sort of a fight for it, and just as I was beginning to get him punished a bit three or four others came streaming out of a bar opposite, so, after a look to see that my Eulcinea had made herself scarce, I jumped on my horse and got out of the place pretty quickly. A fearful thunderstorm came up over the mountains as I rode home, and lasted at intervals all night. The next morning, when I opened the door, there was a poor bundle of wet rags huddled up against it, and a pitifully bruised face looked up out of it. It was Mathilde Boutilliler, the lumberman's wife.

"At first I couldn't make head or tail of her feeble wailing; but in the end I got out of her that her husband had turned her out, saying that if I chose to stand up for her she had better come to me, for he was certainly done with her. He had further emphasized the remark by lockingup their shanty and starting off down the river on one of the rafts.

"She seemed to take it quite for granted that he had power to transfer her in that summary fashion, and had at once set out to tramp across country in all that pitiless storm. Fortunately for her, the dawn comes early in those April nights, or the huddled mass of wet rags would have been found in the open instead of at my door, and dead instead of alive. Well, I took her in—what else was there for me to do? And I suppose that by all the laws of respectability that should have been the end of the story, save as regards the cooking of my dinner; but it wasn't, you see."

He paused and glanced tentatively at his listener, and saw that she sat motionless, the lines of her mouth drawn a little harder, as though from the strain of thought, but with no disapproval manifested.

"I'm not quite cur enough to do on the world-old excuse, 'the woman tempted me,' and I won't deny that the winters seemed a bit less desolate with a spaniel-like devotion awaiting one indoors. In a year or so my boy was born, and then Nemesis stepped in and seated himself opposite me at the fireside—my boy, who grew daily more like the old portraits at home, and yet who could never take his place as a Stewart of Orkwell.

"And then I swore to give him a better place in the New World than ever one of his 'forebears' had held in the Old. It was in those days that I toiled and grubbed for money like any miser. And I was lucky. I speculated in the new mining regions, and everything I touched succeeded. The opening up of the country gave me fresh markets, and I was a prosperous man."

"But the sting was none the less for that, when, about this time last year, there came letters from home. Some wandering missionary, with the usual busybodyness of his kind, had taken them tales of the prosperity and apparent respectability of the prodigal son. My father sent a long letter, dictated to my sister-in-law, and interlarded by her with texts and appeals to Providence. She had, however, it appeared, appealed to Providence in vain for an heir. After fifteen years of marriage she was childless, and her honeyed congratulations on the birth of my boy must have been as bitter for her to write as for me to receive. Neither of us, though, need have troubled ourselves. My boy was 3 years old and able to toddle about at my heels, when one day I rode home to find his stiff little body being carried up from the pond to the house, with the water dripping from his clothes and yellow curls. Nemesis had found him out, too, poor little chap!"

FARM FAMILIES WANTED.

Good Chances Offered by New York Agricultural Commissioners.

Wanted—Men with families to spend the summer on farms in the country; rent free, with milk, vegetables, firewood and other necessaries thrown in. Incidentally, a monthly present of $25 to $35 will be found in the stocking of paterfamilias. Of course, something is expected in return, and the man must know something about farming to be eligible to one of these ideal opportunities.

The man will be expected to get up at 5 o'clock in the morning and milk the cows, assist in tilling the soil, planting, cutting hay and harvesting in season. If he wants to stay the year around and make a permanent home for himself, send his children to the district school and identify himself with town politics, he can do so. Just how he can bring this about will be told him by H. H. Kracke, Assistant State Commissioner of Agriculture, with offices at 23 Park row, says the New York Tribune. For the benefit of men who cannot leave their work during the day, Mr. Kracke may be found at his office every evening except Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

"This is no Utopian idea," said Mr. Kracke, "it is a practical thing. We are receiving applications every day for men to go to work. Most of the jobs are permanent all the year around propositions. And the farmers want men to go to work this month or next, and they want married men for the most part, although they can use a large number of single men during the summer months. And there are lots of opportunities for wives and children to make money on the side. If the wife can milk a cow she can earn money for that. And during the berry season she and the children can earn a good bit picking strawberries, etc. During the apple season they can make good money picking up 'windfalls.'

"The man often gets a chance to raise grain or vegetables on half-shares, and he can keep his eyes open for a chance to work a small farm on a similar basis. And after a while he may be able to buy a small farm on easy terms.

"Why a man who knows anything about farming should stay in the city and struggle with gas bills, rent, heat and proper surroundings and schooling for his children on $10 or $12 a week I can't see. Of course, I can't guarantee to give every man a job, but I would like to get a good list of people who want to go into the country, and I know that I can place a lot of them."

Mr. Kracke said that he didn't know just how great the demand was going to be this season, but from present indications he felt that it was to be large. During the panic last season many of the employes of large factories upstate, who were thrown out of employment, worked on the farms. To what extent these men will be back in their factory positions again Mr. Kracke didn't know, but the number of them still out of work will determine to a great extent, he says, the demand for farm labor in the city.

Its Identity.

"What was going on at your place last night, Square?" inquired Hi Spry. "The house was all lit up, and——"

"Eh-yah!" returned the old codger, grimly. "They were having a stung party, and it was an unqualified success."

"A stung party?"

"Yep! Lot o' people came to spring a surprise party on me, and I failed to show up."—Puck.

What Did He Mean?

Miss Gusher—Oh! how I wish I could paint a pretty face!

De Auber (the artist)—You wouldn't if you possessed one!

Our powers owe much of their energy to our hopes.—Johnson.

DOINGS OF WOMEN

Charming Military Model.

The majority of military models are built on similar lines,—peach basket shape, and our illustration is no exception to this popular shape. It is soft green straw braid, with hands of narrow velvet ribbon a few shades darker, arranged in stripe fashion on top of the brim and continuing underneath to head band. Around the high crown is draped a green scarf, and on right side is a huge American Beauty rose, with foliage.

Care of the Teeth.

For the care of the teeth have a good bristle brush, a box of tooth soap, paste and mouth wash and a spool of dental floss, says a writer. A little pumice can be used with the soap once in a while to clean tartar from the teeth. Gold teeth should be cleaned with powder at least once a week. A good mouth wash is listerine or rose water diluted with water. Ordinary baking soda is good to use, especially if the teeth are decayed. By all means have teeth filled as soon as they show signs of decay. A set of bad teeth, even one's own, if properly cared for and patched up, are better than artificial ones. Fine salt and weak vinegar water will cleanse yellow teeth. Medicine stains can be removed with acids. In severe cases, dip a pointed stick into muriatic acid, rub the stick over the tooth, without touching the gum, and immediately wash the teeth with soda water. This is not dangerous, but it must be used with great care. It whitens the teeth.

Chic Picture Hat.

Summer usually brings forth the picture hat in all its glory. It is broad, flat, unconventional, always. The girl in the illustration wears one of white Neapolitan braid, faced with rose-colored satin. The top is massed with large white roses with delicate pink hearts. She wears, too, a jumper dress of rose-colored satin foulard, with yoke of white net, a string of rose coral beads and roses in her cheeks. Natural or artificial? Well, either. For rouge is much used these days—and she's nothing if not artistic, this summer girl of ours.

The Gospel of Happiness.

The gospel of happiness is one that every woman should lay to heart. What it means to a man to come home at night to a cheerful wife no one but he who has had to fight the hard battle of life knows. If he is prosperous it is an added joy; but it is in misfortune that it shines like a star in the darkness. A complaining wife can kill the last bit of hope and courage in a sorely troubled heart, while a cheerful one gives new courage to begin the fight over again.

Filling for Cushions.

An inexpensive filling for sofa cushions may be made of a dime's worth of cotton batting. Cut the cotton into small squares and put in a baking oven. One must be careful not to let them scorch. After being in the oven twenty-five to thirty minutes each little square will puff up light and fluffy like a feather. Use this for a filling for your pillows and they will feel as soft and dowhy to the touch as any feathers or down that you could buy.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Cherries and plums, in all states of greenness, ripeness and decay, have again become popular.

The quaint poke bonnet, silk handbag, scarfs and shawls, overskirts and sashes point to the past with precision.

Colored foulards, with small black designs in place of white dots, etc., are seen in advance showings of this fabric.

The new band is rounded and then made into soft, loose little curls that are just visible under the drooping hat brim.

Spanish lace scarfs, scarcely seen since the days of their popularity twenty years ago, have again made an appearance.

The cotton materials have been pushed somewhat into the background for the present by the new silks and serges.

Silk and wool fishnet is another of the new mixtures to be had in well-stocked departments.

Foremost among bags is the bronze bag, which comes in logically enough with the craze for bronze shoes and bronze belts.

Bands of velvet, heavily embroidered, either in the metal tinsels or colors, are worn with many of the Grecian coiffures.

Suede or glace leather is used for trimming smart traveling coats. Up-to-date tailors call these garments voyaging wraps.

A great many odd shoulder bands and straps are being introduced, particularly as a finish for jumper gowns worn over guimpes.

White linens are less worn than formerly, but gray, tan khaki, and even the darker shades, are the desirable colors.

One novel arrangement of the sleeve is to cover the stitching with a row of soutache braid, ending under a small, flat button.

Colored net or tulle sleeves have a lining of cream chiffon or net. This gives just a charming softness through the outer mesh.

Health and Beauty Hints.

Carbolized vaseline has soothing qualities for chapped hands.

To prevent stiffness of the muscles and joints they should be frequently rubbed with oil.

It is said that brushing burns so soon as they have become painless with essence of peppermint will prevent unsightly scars.

Hair dressers say that the hair must be worn flat on top and very broad at the sides and back. The low, broad forehead is the effect which must be attained to be fashionable.

For red hands a good lotion, consisting of honey, one ounce; lemon juice, one ounce; eau de cologne, one ounce; will both soften and whiten the hands, and may be applied with benefit at night, just before going to bed.

For the hot, galled tender feet of pedestrians few things are more soothing than a cold poultice made by chopping and bruising a fresh lettuce, placing it in a handkerchief and wrapping it about the feet. The pulp should come next to the skin. It may be left on for as long as convenient.

The Cheerful Woman.

A cheerful woman is like a ray of sunshine wherever she goes, declares an exchange. She not only does good to others by example, but she helps discontented and gloomy people to throw off some of their native melancholy, and to emulate a little of her own cheeriness. The cheerfulness that persists in seeing the bright side of everything, and discover "the silver lining" where others perceive no break in the gray cloud, must not be confounded with selfishness and carelessness. They are totally different attributes, quite antagonistic to one another. A purely selfish and careless woman would be thinking so continually about herself that she would have no reserve force left in which to practice the hundred and one little thoughtful actions which comes within the ken of the woman who has "cheerfulness" as her watchword, and who endeavors to make her sisters more happy by imparting some of it to them.

Don't Borrow Trouble.

Don't borrow trouble, if you must borrow, why then borrow joy, and be sure to loan it to others. The crossing of bridges, which are far in the distance, has ruined the prospects and made cowards of too many good minds. The sooner one kills out fear of what may happen under circumstances not at present evident, the more self-confidence will be develop. Learn self-reliance above all else. Seek to solve your own problems. A leaning nature is full of fear, because it has not yet learned its own strength. You can only develop your own strength through self-reliance. To be self-reliant is to be free from many forms of fear.

Get Rid of Flies.

The housefly, the dirty fly, the typhoid and cholera infantum fly, during the summer will swarm in thousands and millions unless precautions are taken. The housefly, whom we were taught in our childhood to treat with kindness, has been exposed. Its habits are filthy. It breeds in stables and garbage pails and carries the filth it revels in and tracks it across the sugar, the butter and the beefsteak. It paddles its horrid feet, gummed with the vilest rotting matter, in the baby's milk. The doctors have declared war on the housefly. It probably disseminates every disease. It is a nuisance. It must be exterminated. It can be driven out of every home. In an age of knowledge, screens and cheap disinfectants there is no excuse for flies in any household. Clean up your premises. Get rid of breeding places of flies and you will get rid of flies. The battle is half won if begun early.

The next time baby screams with colic, instead of dosing it with soothing sirups or old nurse remedies, such as catnip tea and other decoctions to which our grandmothers pinned their faith, try what hot water sipped from a spoon or taken through a bottle will do to relieve the pain. The water should be fresh and boiled, but not boiling. Care must be taken that it is not hot enough to burn the delicate tongue and gums. This will usually give relief and can be repeated frequently with no danger to the child.

Bars Big Hats.

Women's hats more than thirty-one and a half inches in diameter are classified as wheels by the traffic manager of the Swiss street railways. He has issued an order that women who wear hats exceeding that diameter must ride in the baggage car or leave their hats in that car and enter the passenger car bareheaded.

Save the Net.

Do not destroy any net from old discarded lace curtains. Cut to squares of desired size and stitch together. They make excellent washcloths and they are remarkably durable. Sew them around the edge on the sewing machine.

A Million Widows.

Among the 6,000,000 working women in this country there are nearly a million widows and nearly 800,000 married women whose husbands have failed to provide for them. Nearly 100,000 divorced women are among the wage earners.

Secret Is Out.

It is suggested that the higher duty on stockings is doubtless advocated by the safety deposit companies.

Household Hint.

To mark table linen—Leave the baby and some jam alone at the table for five minutes.—Judge.

EVENING WRAPS WITH HOODS AND CAPUCHONS.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Verland Mees, of Linton, captured a mother possum with sixteen young ones recently.

In the windows of a store in Shelbyville is a snail six and one-half inches long. It was found under an old board in a drug store.

After eating a hearty meal, Mrs. Mary Williams, of Evansville, was taken ill and died in a short time. The physicians say she ate too much.

Tom McCoy, the former Rensselaer banker, just released from the Michigan City prison, will go to Honduras as a section foreman on a railroad owned by a friend.

After pursuing Richard Cline, of Webster Lake, for seven years, Deputy Game Warden John Rigney, of Goshen, finally caught Cline with a gill net in his possession.

Prof. E. G. Hesser, who for the past two years has been teacher of music and drawing in the Kendallville public schools, is preparing to move to Goshen, where he has accepted a position in the schools of that city as supervisor of music.

Chester Crafton, an 11-year-old boy, lost two fingers at Bloomington while exploring the mysteries of a percussion cap. The dynamite exploded when the boy began digging into the cap with a safety pin. His left hand was badly mangled.

Miss Dove Baker, daughter of a restaurant man at Mentone, threw her clothing out of the window of her room last week one night, stole quietly out of the house and eloped with Joseph W. Bartlett, of Bellevue, Ohio, to Warsaw, where they were wedded at midnight by Justice Eller. It is said the bride's plans were aided by a younger sister.

While Mrs. Martha Robinson, an aged woman of Oakland City, was driving along a country road a swarm of bees settled on her and the pony she was driving. The pony ran away and Mrs. Robinson was almost stung to death before help arrived and the bees were driven away. She was taken to a nearby farmhouse and is unable to be taken home.

Two weddings of deaf mutes, one in Shelbyville and the other in Oakland City, took place recently. Miss Clara Garlitch, of Walkerville, a suburb of Shelbyville, was united in marriage to Mr. Otto Thuls, formerly of Vincennes. Miss Flossie Thompson, of Oakland City, became, on the same day, the bride of George Owens, of Shelbyville. Many deaf mutes from Indianapolis witnessed the ceremony. It was performed by an Indianapolis minister.

Muncie's hope of some day purchasing a big tract of woods in the southern part of that city known as Heekin Park, and converting it into a city park, were blasted when the directors of the Heekin Park Land Company, owner of the ground, met and decided to sell the valuable timber from it. It is estimated that there is at least $10,000 worth of walnut, hickory and other lumber on the ground. Without trees the place would be valueless as a park.

A young woman of about twenty summers came to see a lawyer in Nashville a few days ago in regard to obtaining a divorce. They talked over the case, and he advised her that they would probably have no difficulty in getting a decree on the grounds of non-support, and that it was likely to be a default case. She then asked him his fee, and he told her it would cost her $40. "Well," she said, "mother has got three divorces and I have got two for $25 each, and that's all I'm going to pay for this one."

A rat undoubtedly saved the life of Mrs. J. A. Smith, of Logansport. She bent over to get something out of the lower drawer of the bookcase, and in tugging at the drawer she knocked a heavy shell off the top. It fell, striking her full on the head. The force rendered her unconscious, and it was some time before she revived. A physician found that the shell had hit a wire rat which Mrs. Smith had in her hair. This partially broke the force of the blow, and but for this, according to the doctor, her skull would have been fractured.

The First Presbyterian church in South Bend recently celebrated its diamond jubilee and the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. Henry Webb Johnson. The morning service marked the jubilee proper, but the evening service was historical in character. Andrew Anderson gave a sketch of the church, as did also Willis A. Bugbee. The principal speaker was the Rev. Henry Morey, of Sline, Mich., who was pastor of the church prior to the coming of Dr. Johnson. A feature of the jubilee was the ringing of an old bell in the tower of the church which has not been rung for many years and which was connected with the early history of the church.

Mrs. Cornelia Wolfe, wife of Dr. Harvey S. Wolfe, is dead at her home in New Albany, of concussion of the brain caused by a fall down the stairway ten days ago. She never regained consciousness. She was 66 years old.

The smaller of the two bodies of water, known as the Twin Lakes, and located several miles west of Montpelier, has been completely drained by the recent construction of a big ditch emptying into the Salamonie river.

During a funeral service at Park cemetery in Greenfield, A. B. Thomas observed several honey bees clustered about the urn of a monument. After the funeral he went to his home, obtained a hive, returned to the cemetery and hived a colony of fine bees.

Refused the use of any of the churches in Elberfeld, for commencement exercises, the High school of that place gave its commencement at Heldt's Hall. The pastors of the churches said it would be "sacrilegious to permit paid entertainments to be held in the churches."

The change in the name of the postoffice at Lima, to Howe became effective July 1.

Buried beneath a tremendous weight of sand, Herbert Sellman, of Elkhart, 12 years of age, lost his life in a landslide in a garvel pit, where he was at play with his companions.

When his wife was preparing the family dinner at their home in Anderson, Douglas Shott, aged 48 years, slashed his throat several times. The doctors think he will live.

It has been stated that the 1910 session of the Indiana State Sunday School Asosciation would be held in Indianapolis. The convention at Lafayette will ratify the selection of the capital city before it adjourns.

William Schaum, the first heat victim of this season at Evansville, who was prostrated several days ago, has been adjudged insane, and will be admitted to the insane asylum. For many years he was an engineer on the Evansville & Terre Haute railroad.

What is believed to be the largest catfish ever caught on a hand line in the Wabash river was landed by Grover C. Morgan, agent for the Louisville & Nashville railroad at Maunie, Ill., near Evansville. The fish weighed 82 pounds and was presented to officials of the Louisville & Nashville road.

Two were fatally injured in a runaway accident at Hammond. Mrs. Mary Greski, aged 24, had both legs broken and was internally injured. Hank Seiba's hip was fractured, and he was internally injured. Seiba was driving a bakery wagon drawn by a team of horses, and Mrs. Greski stopped him to make purchases. The horses became frightened at a train.

In rubbing his foreleg against an iron trolley pole to which he was hitched, and through which a 600-volt current had become grounded owing to inferior insulation, a horse valued at $250 and belonging to Fred Rump, was electrocuted at Fort Wayne. The pole is on one of the city's main corners, and has a mail box attached to it, causing wonderment that somebody was not fatally shocked in dropping mail into the box.

Charles Mayhall, 10 years old, while fishing in the water works lake at Oakland City, caught a black bass which pulled him into the lake. He was fishing from the dam where the water is very deep when the fish struck, and the boy, holding tightly to his fishing pole, was dragged into the lake. He was grabbed by people standing near and taken from the water. The fish escaped with line and pole.

Horace William Crane, 52 years old, was married in South Bend to Alma Lillian Patterson, 55. They were engaged thirty-five years ago, but the girl's parents objected. Then Crane ran away to sea. Later he married. His first wife died. He divorced his second in March. The original bride to be also married. The union was unhappy and she divorced her husband at Battle Creek, Mich., a week ago. Then she married Crane.

Although she has lived in Bartholomew County practically all of the seventy-three years of her life, Mrs Ellen Elliott, of Burnsville, never took a ride on a train until a few days ago. She went to Indianapolis on a train and will visit relatives. It is also her first visit to Indianapolis. Mrs. Elliott says she believes a woman ought to stay at home and not "gad around," and has refrained from riding on trains on that account.

Frank Pepper, aged 19, of Evansville, will probably have his face disfigured for life and may lose the sight of one eye as the result of trying to show some of his boy friends that he could "eat fire." He filled his mouth full of gasoline and then held his hand with a lighted match at arm's length, while he squirted the liquid toward the light. The gasoline exploded in his face. Both cheeks were badly blistered and one eye was seriously injured.

The Indiana Bankers' Association, represented by nearly three hundred financiers from every section of the State, held its thirteenth annual convention at the Anthony Hotel in Fort Wayne last week. The program included addresses, discussions and business of interest to the financial institutions of Indiana, together with a liberal proportion of diversion. For the second time in the history of the association the convention was held outside of Indianapolis, and the attendance was so large and the interest so marked that the Fort Wayne meeting went on record as one of the most successful in the history of the Indiana organization. With the Indiana bankers, also were gathered many representatives of banking institutions at Toledo, Cincinnati, Chicago and other financial centers outside the boundaries of our own State.

Earlham College at Richmond in its semi-centennial commencement exercises, conferred the degree of bachelor of science on Wilbur and Orville Wright, who received their early education there.

Lewis M. Murphy, once a wealthy resident of Hope, but now a man possessed of little property, is in jail at Columbus at the request of his wife, who feared he would do her bodily harm. Murphy had been drinking and was arrested.

A catfish, four feet long and weighing sixty-five pounds, was brought to Terre Haute by three Terre Haute fishermen. It was caught in Eel river, twenty-two miles from the city. It required the united strength of the three men to land the fish.

The marriage of Thos. B. Feasler, of Indianapolis, and Miss Agnes L. Wyatt, of Petersburg, makes the tenth marriage of deputies employed in the Petersburg postoffice during the past twenty-one months, two of them being a son and daughter of Postmaster Houcias.

BUTLER, INDIANA, FRIDAY, JULY 2, 1909

The Guaranty of Bank Deposits

DURING the late presidential campaign the democratic party in this state and in the national platform advocated the guaranteeing of deposits in banks. The republican party assailed the democratic plan, declaring that it would lead to "wildcat banking." The idea has grown in favor, however, and bankers generally are coming to believe some sort of insurance or guaranty is necessary. At the recent session of the Indiana Bankers' association it was apparent that this state is not behind in this respect.

One of the bankers said:

"If people form great combinations for protecting their families by life insurance, why could not the banks of the country be organized in sections and by the payment of a small tax on deposits accumulate a fund that would protect the depositors of a bank that should die? Then there would be no frightened depositors. Why could not those bank sections be so organized that they could be subject to close examination and control so as to prevent bad management? The fund would not have to be large and the tax that produced it would be small. Any plan that produces the strength of such union will produce confidence."

Another one said:

"In Kansas the national bankers are organizing not only to guarantee deposits without state aid, but to prevent bank failures, and I believe the time is coming when our group associations will organize their own clearing houses for credits, examination and mutual protection. It may be that the political John the Baptists have raised the cry in the wilderness which has called attention to the need of these reforms, but we are realizing that by organization and friendly co-operation we can eliminate the evils."

Both of these men tried to make it appear that they had not been influenced by the political discussion of the question—one of them even going so far as to make an offensive allusion to Mr. Bryan as a "peripatetic and perennial candidate—but they both cried aloud the need of guaranteeing deposits. So it appears that democratic proposals which are at first scoffed at are eventually embraced with affection.

The New Accounting System

THE democratic newspapers of Indiana have contended for years that the taxpayers were paying more for their government than they ought to pay. The people have been the victims of much official inefficiency and recklessness, which, with a touch of rascality, have produced in both state and nation a dreadful state of affairs.

It will be difficult, perhaps, to get back to that simple efficiency which means a proper economy in public expenditures, but the thing can be accomplished by the right sort of effort. The plea of the spenders that we are "a great and rich people" will not much longer be accepted by the taxpayers as a sufficient reason for plundering them.

Much of the intended extravagance and the unintended waste in the handling of public revenues and property can be traced to slipshod and generally inefficient methods of conducting public business. This is now to be corrected. The state board of accounts is at work upon a uniform system that will apply to every public office. Simplicity and thoroughness are aimed at. It will take time and it will cost a considerable sum to get the new accounting system established as the law requires, but it will not only be worth the money, but it should pay for itself many times over in a few years. When this system is in operation it will not be possible for a private and friendly expert to fix up public records in such a manner that they will correspond with the needs of any dishonest official.

The Masses All Right

LOUIS LUDLOW, the gifted and entertaining Washington correspondent of the Indianapolis Star is working hard to create the impression that the democratic party has gone to pieces because certain senators, elected as democrats, have voted contrary to the democratic national platform. If the democratic party were dependent for its existence upon these recreant senators Mr. Ludlow would be justified in his conclusions, But it is not so dependent. The senator or representative who votes contrary to democratic principles is merely an irritating political excresence and as such he will be sloughed off. A man who can not be trusted to be a democrat on the tariff issue can not be trusted to be a democrat at all. But the great masses of democrats the country over are sound to the corn on the tariff question and they will take care that those who are not in accord with the party's attitude are put where they can do no harm.

Former Representative Charles B. Landis, of Delphi, is here, coming specially for the banquet given by the ship subsidy promoters.—Washington Dispatch.

It is evident from this that the Hon. Charles B. is not going to seek re-election to congress—at least not in Indiana. The ship subsidy graft is too well known in this state for that.

THE streets have been made passable by the constant use of the road scraper the past few days. Marshal Lowe and Samuel Noragon have done splendid work, using Mr. Noragon's traction engine for motive power. The amount of trade Butler merchants have lost the past few years on account of the deplorable condition of the city streets can hardly be estimated, but no one will doubt that an enormous sum has gone to other towns for this very reason. Now that we are promised paved streets next year, a more hopeful feeling prevails among our business men. We hope that nothing will be left undone along the line of pavements as that is Butler's only salvation in a commercial sense. The sewers are a great blessing, and pavements will bring joys much greater. Let the good work go on.

THE association of Iowa Associated Dailies, at the close of its convention at Des Moines recently, adopted a resolution recommending that the next legislature pass a law requiring school boards to make public their deliberations and publish an account of their expenditures. The association deplores the attitude of the school boards in various localities who hold secret meetings and refrain from either admitting the public to these meetings or publishing an account of what transpires. The publishers believe that inasmuch as the boards spend the public's money, that the public should be allowed to know the disposition of the funds. The HERALD has long advocated a movement of this kind. It is right and proper.

"BACKBONE OF THE ARMY"

Part of the Infantry Will Play at the Big Army Show

As the general public is more familiar with the infantry than with the other arms of military service, the work of the three regiments selected by the war department to appear in the great Military Tournament at Toledo, will be of especial interest.

The extended order drill of the infantry will be given in order to show the present method of attack under battle conditions, which will be displayed most realistically. Much blank ammunition will be used in illustrating these battle scenes. Men will be obliged to seek cover as best they can, and follow out all the tactics that would be used in actual warfare. In this drill they will be divided into scouts and firing line, supports and reserves The drill will end with a thrilling charge.

The close order drills of the infantry will be entirely at the double time. They will illustrate all of the drill hall movements of an infantry battalion, in fast, snappy and showy work, which will appeal to everyone who witnesses drilling in the precise, yet sprightly manner used by regular army men.

Performances will be given twice a day from July 5 to 10, with virtually no repetition of acts, bringing in, in turn, the highly specialized work of the nearly 5,000 infantry, cavalry, artillery, engineers, hospital and signal corps orderep to Toledo for this great spectacle. Low excursion rates will be given each day.

If You Were the Editor

Would you always tell the truth?

When the homely daughter of an old subscriber marries a worthless skunk of a fellow, would you praise her beauty and sterling worth and congratulate her on securing a popular young man for a husband, or would you tell the truth?

When some miserly old citizen, who has denied his family for years and pinched his dollars until the eagle screamed, finally passes in his checks, would you refer to him as a respected pioneer, or would you tell the truth!

When some home talent entertaintainment rasps your nerves to the point of breakdown, would you say that it was delightful and everybody acquitted themselves with credit, or would you tell the truth?

When some hypocritical sinner who uses the church as a cloak for his general cussedness gets active in some reform movement, would you praise the efforts of this public spirited reformer, or would you tell the truth!

The new papa gets "fuller'n a tick" to celebrate the event; would you say that he was overcome with joy, or would you tell the truth?

Seriously speaking, we believe the vast majority of newspapers strive conscientiously to tell the truth in large matters, but there certainly are a good many times in which the truth and diplomacy fail to walk hand in hand. The newspaper, like the individual, would have but few friends if it always told the truth.

Social Event

Mrs. W. C. DeLong was hostess to the St. Joe Culture club Thursday of last week, it being their mid-summer meeting. The Krise livery conveyed fifteen ladies to this place, who brought with them well-filled baskets and light hearts and the day was surely one of perfect pleasure.

After the splendid dinner, the president, Mrs. Dr. Bowman, called the club to order. The constitution was read and adopted and sixteen members, including the hostess, responded to roll call. Mr DeLong then took their pictures. Then came a stroll up town where they visited the principal points of interest, such as the Knisely and Holden's dry goods stores, Geddes' drug store, May's tailor shop and others, (not forgetting the 5 & 10c store.)

Supper was served at six o'clock, consisting of a delicious menu, to which was added Butler ice cream made in the club colors, purple and gold.

The ladies departed at seven o'clock, thanking the hostess for the royal entertainment, after deciding to spend a day with Mrs. Bowman at Cold Springs in September.

Methodist Church News

Celebrate the 4th of July at the Methodist church. The Sunday school will observe the day as Rally day. Let every teacher and scholar be present. New scholars will be welcome. We want all members of the cradle roll to be present. All scholars bring flags. Patriotic songs will be sung.

At 10:30 the minister will preach a patriotic sermon. Text, Psalm 116:7: "Return unto thy rest O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee."

The evening service at 7:30 will be unusually interesting. Several young people will sing and read short selections on the relation between patriotism and christianity. The minister will relate the famous story of "The Man Without a Country," by Edward Everett Hale.

The music for these meetings will be some of our old patriotic hymns.

The public invited. Strangers or visitors in our city will always find a kind welcome.

EDMUND F. ALBERTSON, Minister.

The Price of a Soul

The papers are now giving us sketches of, and incidents in, the life of the late H. H. Rogers; they are also estimating the wealth which he left. That he was a man of mental strength and business ability goes without saying. His wealth is variously stated at from fifty to one hundred million dollars—let us average it at seventy-five millions Giving him fifty working years, he has collected on an average a million and a half a year, in addition to what he has expended. A million and a half a year! This is an enormous income, and if honestly earned, it measures an extraordinary service to society. Will the friends of Mr Rogers point out just what he did, so that the public may judge as to whether his income exceeded his earnings? The president receives seventy-five thousand dollars a year, and as the chief executive, presides over a government under which more than eighty millions of people live. The average income of Mr Rogers for more than fifty years has been twenty times as great as the income enjoyed by the president of the United States. Did he perform a work twenty times as important, or render a service twenty times as valuable?

Opinions differ as to Mr Rogers' ideals. His friends emphasize his charities, while his opponents call attention to his business methods The opinions expressed seemed to be largely colored by the sympathies of those who have spoken—those who speak from the standpoint of the monopolist see in him a great representative of industry; those who regard a private monopoly as indefensible and intolerable, cite him as an illustration of the manner in which habitual wrongdoing will sear the conscience and distort the vision. Amid such a variety of witnesses it is not strange that the readers should be confused by the conflicting testimony, but there is one witness whose evidence ought to be accepted without question, and that is H. H. Rogers himself. His will doubtless revealed the inner Rogers, and gives us the real measure of his soul. He leaves practically all of his immense wealth to his family. He makes a gift to the town of his birth, but beyond that there is nothing, or next to nothing, to indicate that he recognized the claims of the public. His sympathies did not go out to hospitals and institutions of mercy; his spiritual life was not such as to link him with the interests of the church in the spread of the gospel or in the extension of missions, domestic or foreign He seemed to be little interested in philanthropic enterprises.

But possibly it is just as well that his selfishness manifested itself in the disposition of his goods. If he had been generous and large hearted in his bequests, his will would have been used to give a halfway justification to the methods which he employed in the accumulation of his money; but as it is his will presents an indictment not only against him, but against that peculiar type of business life which he represented—a life in which the soul is shriveled and the better impulses stifled by business practices which deaden the conscience and rob life of that which makes it worth living. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" —The Commoner.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

It seems strange that the people must be kept awake all night by the hoodlums who have for the past week persisted in yelling like indians and shooting off cannon fire crackers. Some of the explosions were deafening and could be heard for miles. Mayor Webster published a notice in both papers last week warning people against shooting off fireworks before the 4th of July, but it seemed to have no terrors for those who annually make night hideous at this time of the year. If the police would get busy and make a few arrests it might have a wholesome effect.

Mrs. Grover Cleveland has testified under oath that the article credited to her husband and used by the republicans for a time in the last campaign is a forgery and the rascal who perpetrated the offense is headed for the penitentiary. It was well known that the relations between Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Bryan were strained, but neither Mr. Bryan nor any other sensible person ever believed that the clumsy "Cleveland article" was genuine. It was calculated to do Mr. Cleveland's memory much more harm than good, and his widow's indignant repudiation of it has branded the whole thing as a political infamy.

Events in the senate, especially those related to the adoption of some form of special taxation, continue to furnish a series of anomalies and even at this distance the antics of republican conservations following in the wake of a broadminded republican president and endeavoring with ludicrous awkwardness to appear to like it, furnish no small degree of entertainment. Observe for instance, the Hon. Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island, the Hon. Eugene Hale, of Maine, and the Hon. Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania, valiantly endeavoring to crush back their own innate sympathies for the corporations and to induce such conservatives as Mr. Borah, of Idaho, Mr. Bristow, of Kansas, Mr. LaFollette, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Brown, of Nebraska, to join with them in separating the unfortunate and impoverished sugar trust, the steel trust, the tobacco trust and other infantile American industries from a portion of their hard earned profits. And yet this is precisely what is occuring today in the American House of Lords. It is hardly necessary to remark that the course of Mr. Aldrich and his associates is dictated by fear of what to them would be a greater evil, the income tax. Nevertheless the spectacle of these indurated conservatives making a desperate fight for a tax on the net earnings or corporations, constitutes one of those humerous stunts in history which probably no other nation ever presented to an amused world.

The federation has been after Blakely's official scalp ever since his appointment by Governor Hanly. The appointment was made secure by its ratification by the senate just before Hanly surrendered the office to Governor Marshall.

About 4:15 o'clock Friday morning the people of Waterloo were aroused from their slumbers by the warning ringing of the fire bell and soon the fire department was on its way to the scene of the conflagration, which was the burning of the two-story frame building at the corner of Maple and Wayne streets, occupied by Rufus & George as a meat market. Despite the heroic work of the department, the building was pretty badly gutted, but the fire boys prevented the spread of the flames to other buildings and smothered the fire before the building was entirely destroyed. All the machinery in the building was destroyed, the only thing saved being a meat scale. The upper story was unoccupied. The loss will probably approximate $2,000. There was some insurance carried. The building belonged to Josiah Rufner. The origin of the fire is unknown. It is supposed to have started in the southeast corner of the market, where the work in the preparation of the meat for sale purposes was done.

A search of the meadow disclosed the nest which was built of large sticks and lined with course grass, resting flat on the ground. The four eggs, it contained are as large as a small hen's egg, of a bluish white color one of which can be seen in the News office window. The bird belongs to the falcon family and all domestic fowls are its prey. It is fortunate that the one was killed as the other one left the neighborhood, when the nest was destroyed.—St. Joe News.

EARLY STRUGGLES OF THE WRIGHT BROTHERS

Aviators Had Many Disappointments in the Days Before Kings Made Journeys to Do Them Honor

WILBER WRIGHT

THE WRIGHT BROTHERS' AIR-SHIP

ORVILLE WRIGHT

Wholly unspoiled by the many honors which royalty had heaped upon them and as modest and unassuming in manner as they were before their splendid triumphs in aviation, the Wright brothers came back to their Dayton home a year ago, and they were practically unknown. Now their name is familiar to every civilized section of the globe.

For untold centuries man has dreamed of some day flying through the air. Those who best know the men who have made this dream a reality know that phantasy and romance have no place in their sober and matter-of-fact minds. The work they have done has been performed under the most prosaic conditions and in the face of adversities which would have appalled any but the most resolute. The faith of the father in the abilities of his boys to solve a problem which had only excited derision is one of the most striking features of a triumphant history.

Father a Clergyman.

Bishop Milton Wright is a minister of the United Brethren Church, and began his ministry in 1856. He served as a missionary in Indianapolis, and two years later, in Oregon. He married Miss Susan Katherine Koerner in 1859, and continued in an itinerant pastorate for several years, drawing a meager salary but frugally putting by a few dollars against a time of need.

Of a family of seven children, all were born in different parts of the country except Miss Katherine and Orville, whom the stork brought to Dayton, where they have lived and worked all their lives. During the early years of the bishop's residence in Dayton he was editor of the Religious Telescope, the official publication of his church. In 1889 a dissension arose and the church was divided. The bishop retired from the management of the paper, and has lived in retirement since, drawing a meager income from some land in Iowa, which he had acquired when land in that State was very cheap.

When mere schoolboys, the now famous brothers showed a special aptitude for analytical reasoning along mechanical lines, but displayed little taste for the mathematical and literary branches of the school curriculum. They abandoned their studies in the public schools to take up the mechanical pursuits which so strongly appealed to them, and they entered their chosen field together, having worked conjointly ever since.

Soon after their abandonment of the schools, the bicycle business sprung up and they found in that line a calling peculiarly fitted for their talents and inclinations, which led them to open a repair shop, which later was turned into a small factory in which wheels embodying their ideas of what a bicycle ought to be were constructed on a small scale. They failed to reap the harvest which was the reward of so many bicycle makers, but they managed to make a comfortable living, and, in their spare hours, began to think of aerial navigation. In speaking of this embryonic idea, Wilbur said:

"The matter occurred to both my brother and myself at about the same time, but, while both of us yearned for an opportunity to make some experiments along that line, each was reluctant to mention the matter for fear of incurring the good-natured jocularity of the other, but the ideas finally found expression, and we stealthily set to work to build our first small model, which differed from that with which the public is now fairly familiar.

"The first model was crudely built, and, when completed, my brother and myself stole out in the dusk one evening for a demonstration. It was a rather shamefaced pair of lads who carried the contrivance to a secluded spot, and it was anything but a spectacular performance that rewarded us for our work, but we could see that the principle of the machine was correct and we returned not a little excited over the result of our first experiment.

Learning to Fly.

"The first model was abandoned and we began work on a larger machine, in which we embodied changes suggested by our few minutes' observation of the first one. This machine performed much better, but, of course, was still far from perfect, as for that matter is the present aeroplane, but it showed a marked improvement over its predecessor. From this time we continued to build model after model, each a little different from the preceding one, and at length made a machine without motive power in which we decided to attempt a flight. This was about as much of a success as was the first small model, but from it we learned the things which we had lacked in order to make a practicable aeroplane."

At this point the experiments had reached a stage which required the investment of some capital, and the boys took their father into their confidence. He unhesitatingly turned to his only resource, and sold his Iowa farm, which had, till that time, been his only means of support. This money he gave to his sons for use in their undertaking. Had the machine proven an ultimate failure it meant ruin for the aged bishop and his family, but the boys carefully invested the money and, with the more pretentious machine which they were enabled to build, they started for the sand dunes of the North Carolina coast.

Necessity of Secrecy.

During the early years of experiment the two brothers had carefully read all the literature they could find touching on the subject of aviation, and one of the results of their investigations was the discovery of the fact that many others were working with the same end in view, and, if they were to reap the fruits of their labors and insure the safety of their father's all which was invested in their enterprise, the greatest secrecy was required in these, the crucial tests of the series.

The inventors and a machinist, who had worked with them from the beginning of the experiments, established a camp near Kitty Hawk, N. C., on a spot from which they could command a view for a long distance in every direction and which offered no obstruction to a flight of a short distance above the ground. No motors were used in these first tests, which were conducted along the lines of gliding, one of the brothers taking his position in the machine with his feet on the ground and the other two men running along with the ends of the plane held above the sand until sufficient momentum had been attained to permit the aeroplane and its passenger to rise from the earth for a short distance. The result of these tests was the arrival at the proper angle at which the planes should be set and the amount of surface required to sustain the weight of one passenger. It was in these tests that the inventors acquired the art of balancing in the air and the skill which they have since imparted to others in European countries.

Last Stage of Development.

Having reached this point, they then installed a motor, and the last stage of the development of the aeroplane principle was entered upon. This engine, while demonstrating the feasibility of propulsion by such power, proved inadequate to the requirements, and the boys were required to design a motor of special pattern, which took much time to build, but which answered the purpose and is in use now with several improvements suggested by observation since the North Carolina trials. The brothers now found themselves with an almost perfect machine, but the capital from the sale of the Iowa farm was nearly exhausted, and their bicycle business, which they were compelled to neglect, was bringing in almost nothing, and, in their hour of need, their sister Katherine, who had saved a small sum from her salary as teacher in the Dayton public schools, came to their assistance.

Stories of the aims of the brothers had appeared in Associated Press dispatches prior to this time, only to awaken the risibilities of the acquaintances of the inventors, and the fact somehow leaked out that Miss Wright was risking her laboriously hoarded money in the venture. This moved her companions to well-meant remonstrance and pitying commiseration. Those doubting friends were very much in evidence when the cheering crowd gathered at the Union station in Dayton to welcome the men and woman who had just returned from receiving the congratulations and honors heaped upon them by the rulers and scientists of Europe. In that foreign field aviation had been given serious attention for several years only to furnish the scene in which a pair of quiet Yankees suddenly appeared and, at one stride, forged ahead of the bright minds which had been backed by the treasure of entire nations. The history of those triumphs is fresh in the public mind.

WILBUR WRIGHT AND KING ALFONSO IN WRIGHT AEROPLANE.

AN UNWILLING PIRATE.

Some time last October the old ship Dessoug foundered at sea. It had a long career, beginning with its launching in Scotland about 1864, and ending in the humble capacity of a coal transport. Its great feat was the bringing to this country, at the expense of William H. Vanderbilt, of "Cleopatra's Needle," which the Khedive of Egypt had presented to the city of New York. A writer in the Brooklyn Eagle tells the story of this famous voyage.

Nobody had ever heard of the Dessoug when Lieut. H. H. Gorringe was commissioned to go to Alexandria to bring home the obelisk. Twenty-five thousand dollars bought the boat from a steamship company in the eastern Mediterranean. Two plates were removed from the bows, and the gigantic obelisk was rolled right into the inside, where it was made secure, and the plates replaced. Although the Dessoug met with a terrible storm while on the way across the ocean, and although the machinery was disabled, the vessel rode it out in safety, and brought the priceless cargo intact to port.

The real romance of the trip, however, lay in quite a different direction. When Lieutenant Gorringe decided to buy the Dessoug, commercial complications arose. He was warned that if he applied for clearance papares a score or more attachments would be placed on the boat because of debts owing to English and Greek merchants by the Khedive. Accordingly, as soon as the obelisk was aboard, and properly fastened, the ship was put to sea without any formality.

Congress did not allow the American flag to fly over the craft which had been built abroad, and the captain did not dare to raise the Egyptian colors because he had not officially "cleared" from the Alexandria custom-house. Therefore the Dessoug was literally a piratical boat, and fair prize for any civilized nation that captured it.

The lieutenant took the precaution to write to the governor of Gibraltar, the only port at which he intended to stop, stating the exact facts, and asking that he direct the officer who came aboard to make a very superficial examination.

Just before leaving Alexandria the name of the boat—Dessoug—was painted on the quarters and on the bows in letters a yard high. This was in order to enable the identity to be fixed by any vessel which meditated firing a shot across its bows.

Arriving at Gibraltar, Lieutenant Gorringe called upon the governor and explained the situation. The governor comprehended the absurdity of the case, and allowed the nationless craft to coal and provision at his port. Had he chosen he could have seized the Dessoug and sent the treasure in the hold to be erected on the Thames Embankment.

RAT ATTACKS CHILD IN BED.

At Middletown, N. Y., Emma Dunlap, 8 years old, aroused her parents early in the morning with her shrieks, when a big rat attacked her in her bed. The parents rushed to the child's room, and the rat, covered with the little girl's blood, ran across the bed and disappeared in a hole in the floor. The rat had bitten the child twice in her left cheek.

The wealth of the United States in 1850 was $7,000,000,000, speaking in round terms; in 1860, $16,000,000,000; in 1870, $30,000,000,000; in 1880, $43,500,000,000; in 1890, $65,000,000,000; in 1900, $88,500,000,000, and in 1904, $107,000,000,000.

SOME STATISTICS WHICH INDICATE PROSPERITY

WHILE the tariff makers are discussing schedules in an endeavor to make Uncle Sam's income fit his expenditures, and the followers of John Bull are worrying about budgets and taxation, the everyday American citizen appears to be as prosperous as ever. Prosperity appeared to be working overtime during February and March, if there is any reliance to be placed in the figures which the government experts gather in huge volumes for the information of anyone who cares to know exactly what we are doing in the matter of trade and commerce, writes H. B. Chamberlain in the Chicago Record-Herald.

It is axiomatic that hard times strike at the luxuries first of all, while Prosperity's genial smile is made known by the demand for those things not essential to comfort. In the national capital, where the statistical sharps garner and collate all manner of figures, the return of Prosperity is always scented when there is a spurt in the trade between the United States and France. Trade may boom with England or Germany, but usually the articles purchased in those countries are classed as necessities, excluding, perhaps, toys and picture cards from the realm of the Kaiser, while the principal imports into this country from France are manufactures and luxuries.

In view of the reiteration that money is not particularly plentiful, notwithstanding the fact that the banks are anxious to loan at a low rate of interest, it is interesting to drag forth from the mass of figures compiled by the United States Bureau of Statistics the information that imports into this land from that of which Paris is the capital increased 60 per cent in the months of February and March. During the same period the increase from all Europe and the rest of the world showed a gain of but 45 per cent. In other words, the total value of imports from France in February was $10,000,000, as against $6,750,000 for the same month of the preceding year. In March last the imports were $11,338,000, against $6,500,000 a year before.

To convey an idea of the sort of goods purchased in France recently, it will not be impertinent to examine the listed things as they appear in the interminable columns, taking those only that aggregate large sums and are commonly considered luxuries.

The first big item that arrests attention and suggests comparison is "Diamonds." The imports of this precious stone from France in March last totaled $591,717, as against $51,224 during the same month of the previous year. Simply stated, more than ten times as many diamonds were brought into this country from France last March as was the case a year previous. Evidently somebody is prosperous. Diamonds are not rated as necessities by many people not in the glazing trade.

Using March last as the month with which to compare the values of French imports received a year ago, it is found that $481,943 worth of other precious stones were bought, as against $98,424. In the matter of cotton laces, edgings, embroideries and similar goods, the difference is $1,054,293, as against $605,714. Silks jumped from $1,173,183 to $1,907,497. Champagne was sold to the extent of $387,892, as against $203,523, evidence that the anti-liquor crusade has not affected that drink materially as yet. Last March we bought $333,336 worth of kid gloves, while our purchase from France a year before was the mere bagatelle of $278,914. Of olive oil we required enough to cost $140,657, while we worried along with $84,106 worth in March, 1908. During 1908 we paid France $101,999,541 for goods purchased. But the balance of trade was in our favor, as we received $113,802,055 for our exports.

RAZE GHOST HOUSE.

Workmen Tear Down Residence Long Given Over to "Spirits."

Hyde Park, a Chicago suburb, has lost the abode of one of its choicest legends and the only reminder of one of its bloodiest mysteries, as well as its most ancient landmark, in the tearing down of the old three-story brick house known as the Atkinson homestead at the northeast corner of Calumet avenue and 51st street.

For nearly forty years the old house with the "haunted tower" has stood there, and for more than half that time it has been the center of all the ghost stories of the neighborhood. Little children quickened their pace and took the opposite side of the street on their way to school when they came to the deserted building, where, according to report, the ghost of a young woman was frequently seen, and even older persons have avoided it at night.

Thirty-two years ago there was a mysterious death in the old house—a murder according to the gossip of the day, and since that time no one has lived in the building for more than a few weeks at a time. For nearly twenty years the site has been advertised for sale or lease, but even now there are no bidders for it. The ancient structure that stands there has been neglected and crumbling to ruin for years, and the city authorities finally ordered it torn down.

The old mansion about which cluster tales of murder, of moans, and screams and of strange, green lights at night, was built in 1871 by John Atkinson, a pioneer stone contractor. At that time it was the most stately mansion in the Hyde Park district. A large section of what is now Washington Park was the orchard of the grounds and the garden of the estate occupied several blocks, extending as far as the present corner of 50th street and Indiana avenue. Two years after it was built, Mr. Atkinson met with business reverses and turned the property over to creditors. It was later sold to a family of the name of Brady, who lived there until 1876, when the house again changed hands.

It was at this period that the old house began to fall on evil days. It became the property of a corporation and was rented to a woman who kept a rooming house there. One day in 1877, a young woman who was living in the building was missed. Her name, according to the story of the neighborhood, was Myrtle Read, and she was an exceptionally pretty girl of about 22 years. Other inmates of the house admitted that Read was not her real name, and said that she came to Chicago from the country. Her disappearance came to the knowledge of the police. An investigation was started and three days after the young woman's disappearance her body was found in a small room in the tower of the house with a bullet through her heart. The case became another unsolved mystery.

After this tragedy the police closed the place and it stood empty for several years. About the end of the first year of its desertion strange stories began to be told about the old house. Late pedestrians told of hearing screams in the deserted rooms and of seeing strange flickering lights at the empty windows.

These stories grew with the telling until the building became, in the popular mind, a veritable haunted house, and it became almost impossible to rent it. Thereafter several tenants tried to live in it, but, according to the neighborhood stories, none could stay longer than a few weeks, and some only a night or two, because of the cries and screams coming from the tower room. Some of the tenants are reported to have declared that the ghost of the murdered girl appeared before them weeping, wringing her hands, and begging for mercy.

TUMOR OF FOUR YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindley, Ind. —"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed a cyst tumor of four years' growth, which three of the best physicians declared I had. They said that only an operation could help me. I am very glad that I followed a friend's advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it has made me a strong and well woman, and I shall recommend it as long as I live."—MRS. MAY FRY, Lindley, Ind.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy—tumor. If you have mysterious pains, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy, and should give confidence and hope to every sick woman.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

To Cure Insomnia.

A castle of sleep, which has been established by Dr. Lemesle of Loches, in Touraine, is described by the British Medical Journal. The doctor uses physical agents, such as fixation of the eyes on a bright object and the monotonous ticking of a clock, to lull the senses of his patients. Should these fail he uses blue light, which has been found to produce a tiring effect.

Dr. Lemesle keeps his patients in a blue atmosphere; the glass in the windows is blue, and all the decorations and furniture of the room are of the same hue. At night the electric light shines through blue globes.

The other "cure" is by high-frequency currents. The facts are supplied by Dr. W. F. Somerville, medical electrician at the Western Infirmary, Glasgow. In his opinion the value of high-frequency currents in the treatment of various functional and other diseases is not sufficiently recognized by the profession.

WHEN YOUR BACK ACHES.

It Is a Warning That the Kidneys Are Sick and Need Help.

A bad back makes every day a dull round of pain and misery. It's a sign the kidneys are sick and cannot keep up their never-ending task of filtering the blood. Lame back, backache, dizzy spells and urinary disorders are warning that must not be overlooked.

John M. Burwick, R. F. D., Dayton, Tenn., says: "Three years ago kidney disease fastened itself on me. I failed rapidly until I had hardly enough strength to totter about. My back pained terribly, the urine passed scantily and with pain, and my legs seemed almost lifeless. I lay for three weeks in mortal agony, wishing death would end my sufferings. At this time I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, discharging the doctor. I grew better and in a month's time was out again. In two months I was as well as ever in my life."

Amos' Anodyne.

"We always wondered a little how Amos Dore and his wife got along—really," "Aunt Em" Macomber said, frankly. "Some in the neighborhood said they'd never overheard a single loud or cross word on either side, but Lije Daniels always stuck to it that Amos was as mis'able at home as a man could be.

"He never spoke right out till Amos died and Mis' Dore went back uncountry to her folks. Then he let out."

"What?" queried Aunt Em's visitor.

"Well, Amos worked logging alongside of Lije every winter, and summers they hayed together most always, and it seems," said Aunt Em, impressively, "that Amos complained of his shoes hurting him about all the time. Finally Lije asked why he wore tight shoes.

"'Why don't you get a pair big enough?' says Lije, one day.

"'Well, I'll tell you,' Amos says. 'When I wear tight shoes I forget all my other troubles.'"

The Value of a Sense of Honor.

"A keen and sure sense of honor," says President Eliot, of Harvard University, "is the finest result of college life." The graduate who has not acquired this keen and sure sense of honor, this thing that stamps the gentleman, misses the best thing that a college education can impart.

Great advantages bring great responsibilities. We cannot divorce them. A liberal education greatly increases a man's obligations and responsibilities. It is more of a disgrace for a college graduate to grovel, to stoop to mean, low practices, than for a man who has not had an education. The educated man has gotten a glimpse of power, of grander things, and he is expected to look up, not down, to aspire, not to grovel.

We cannot help feeling that it is worse for a man to go wrong who has had all the benefits of a liberal education, than it is for one who has not had glimpses of higher things, who has not had similar advantages, because where much is given, much is expected. The world has a right to expect that wherever there is an educated man people should be able to say of him as Lincoln said of Walt Whitman, "There goes a man."

We have a right to expect that the college graduate will be a man, a real man. It is a great thing to say of a man, in fact, there is nothing higher that can be said than that he is a real man.—Success Magazine.

Louisiana's Great Resources.

"Louisiana has extraordinary natural wealth in advance, I think, of any of her sister States," said Col. Warren J. Hill of New Orleans.

"It's sulphur mines excel any in the world, and it has the second largest deposits of rock salt on the globe. In the amount of oil produced it leads in this country, and it is likewise first in rice and sugar. The cotton production is heavy, and the supply of hardwood timber is the greatest in the Union. Our latest and most wonderful discovery is natural gas. The location is in the northern belt of the State, and experts claim that there is a supply of such magnitude as to surpass any known fields. The gas will be piped to New Orleans as soon as a rich St. Louis syndicate can build a line of transportation, although the distance is 350 miles."

A household once supplied with Hamlins Wizard Oil is seldom allowed to be without it. In case of sudden mishap or accident Wizard Oil takes the place of the family doctor. Are you supplied?

The Rock of Moses.

The "Rock of Moses" lies in the wild valley at the base of Jebel Musa, the Mount of the Law, in the peninsula of Sinai. The rock is eighteen or twenty feet high, slightly inclined, a rough indentation running over each side, which is intersected here and there with slits, and the stone is worn away in places as if from the effects of running water.

It is beyond doubt the oldest known legendary object in the vicinity. The Koran refers to this rock more than once, and from these allusions arose the reverence of the Bedouins, who hold it sacred. From the middle ages onward it has been visited by Christian pilgrims, who have carved rude crosses in its side. Of all the objects in the desert it is most closely bound up with the simple faith of its wild inhabitants and of its early visitants. —The Strand.

FREEDOM.

Here in the forest now,
As on that old July
When first our fathers took the vow,
The bluebird, stained with earth and sky,
Shouts from a blowing bough
In green aerial freedom, wild and high—
And now, as then, the bobolink,
Out on the uncertain brink
Of the swaying maple, swings
While over the wood his proclamation rings,
A daring boast that would unkingdom kings!

Even so the wild birds sang on bough and wall
That day the Bell of Independence Hall
Thundered upon the world the Word of Man,
The word God uttered when the world began —
That day when Liberty began to be,
And mighty hopes were out on land and sea.
But Freedom calls her conscripts now as then:
It is an endless battle to be free.
As the old dangers lessen from the skies
New dangers arise:
Down the long centuries eternally,
Again, again, will rise Thermopylae—
Again, again, a new Leonidas
Must hold for God the imperiled Pass.
As long as the ages run
New Lexington will rise on Lexington;
And many a valorous Warren fall
Upon the imperiled wall.

Man is the conscript of an endless quest,
A long divine adventure without rest—
A holy war, a battle yet unwon
When he shall climb beyond the burnt-out sun.
Each hard-earned freedom withers to a bond;
Freedom forever is beyond—beyond!
—Edwin Markham in New York Independent.

Firecrackers

'Twas the day before the Fourth of July and Freddie had no firecrackers. He could hear the boom, boom of the cannon-crackers all around where he lived, and every place he looked it seemed as if the ground was covered with crackling squibs, but he had none.

Still Freddie was not unhappy. He was only impatient. When his father came home he thought all would be well, then there would be lots and lots of crackers.

Freddie met his father at the door, and John Wilson, rough as he was, softened under the lad's greeting.

"So Freddie wants some firecrackers? What, Roman-candles and squibs? What! And a whirl-a-gig? You mean a 'cartwheel,' don't you, Freddie, boy?"

Without waiting for an answer the father caught his son with his hands below the arms and hoisted him on his knees.

"You'll have them, Fred," he said, "and, what's more, your old dad will help you fire them off."

Freddie's eyes shown like diamonds; he clapped his hands together in glee and said: "Papa, you mind just before mamma lay that quiet I couldn't wake her no matter how I tried, she told me I'd never want for firecrackers and squibs and everything good on the Fourth of July. She was right, too, wasn't she, papa? And she hasn't forgot me yet, either, papa, for when I was in bed last night I seen her all in white as close as anything to the bed, and she kissed me on both cheeks and said: 'Little Freddie will have a good time tomorrow.' And that's right, isn't it, papa?"

The boy fixed his eyes with a confident look on his father and the parent turned his head away. He was afraid to let Freddie see his countenance. For the boy's eyes reminded him of a face fixed on his memory forever. John recalled a face with a lasting smile, with eyes that were the color of a clear sky on a summer's morning, and dark hair hanging in abundant glory around her head. And for all that, he had been a hard drinker since Mary died one year ago tonight. His position had gone, and, worst of all, Mary's boy had been ill-treated.

"Yes, Freddie and papa will have a good time tomorrow," he said at last. "And now when my boy knows what firecrackers and fun will be his in the morning, doesn't he want to go to bed and take a big, big sleep, so that he may be up bright and early in the morning to bang away the Fourth?"

The father laid Freddie down to sleep in his own bed. He watched the lad until his eyes closed in slumber, and a little later, when perhaps the boy was looking again at that white figure, John turned and went out of the house to buy the firecrackers.

Wiping a tear away on his coat sleeve as he reached the outside, John walked swiftly down the street toward the notion store. As he turned a corner a voice hailed him: "Hallo there, Jack! What's the rush?" Wilson looked back and there stood the "boys."

Just as the sun on the Fourth of July a year ago was peeping through house Freddie opened his eyes, and without waiting to look around called: "Papa, papa, did you get the firecrackers?"

But no answer came, for the father had not come back.

Freddie was surprised at his father's absence; it had often happened before during the past year, but: "Today, today was the Fourth, and where was papa with all the firecrackers?" Rising, the boy surveyed the dusty room. No papa, no firecrackers anywhere. Then he climbed out of bed and pattered into the kitchen, and still no father, no firecrackers. Returning to the bed Freddie buried his face in the pillow and cried himself into a broken slumber. A couple of hours later he awoke with a start, and again calling: "Papa, papa," received no answer.

Then he remembered how his mother, in the night, had told him how he was "going to have a good time the Fourth." Trustingly he began to search the room and kitchen for what "mamma had brought him." Underneath the bed and old rickety table Freddie looked and looked. When his search revealed nothing he burst into tears, and crying, called: "Ma-ma, ma-ma, Freddie wants a firecracker."

In time the crying grew tiresome, and again the hunt began. All over the room he searched. Not a corner of the kitchen was left unexplored. In an old desk he found a revolver.

"Oh, look, look!" he cried, "what mamma sent me."

He hugged the weapon lightly in both hands and carried it triumphantly to the bed. His eyes were aglow with pleasure. With all the might of his little fingers he pressed the trigger. A first, second, and third time the hammer fell. At each releasing of the spring he shouted with delight. His fingers grew tired, and the fourth time he tried to raise the hammer and failed. Still, not to be defeated, he turned the pistol toward his breast and put his thumbs on the trigger and pressed. Slowly the hammer rose. Then there was a report and Freddie fell back on the bed with the look of pleasure on his face changed to one of pain.

An hour later his father came in. He was sober, and in his arms was a pile of firecrackers. As he crossed the threshold he shouted: "Freddie boy, come here and look what papa has brought you." But no answer came.

Thinking the boy was asleep he stood in the kitchen and called: "Freddie, here's papa; don't you want to see all the nice, big firecrackers?"

He walked into the bedroom. At the bedside he stopped and let the firecrackers fall in a heap on the floor. As he lifted Freddie in his arms the little fellow opened his eyes, and with a look of wonder said: "Mamma, I'se had a good Fourth." Then a quiver and all was over.

The father laid his boy down and a far-away look came into his eyes. He looked at the firecrackers and then riveted his gaze on the pale face of his dead son. He lifted the revolver. A report followed. But the firecrackers lay intact on the floor.

A SAD FOURTH OF JULY.

The Day on Which Two of America's Greatest Patriots Died.

The Fourth of July, 1826, was the death day of two of the republic's greatest men, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson. On July 4, 1831, five years later, James Monroe breathed his last. Sixty years later, on July 4, 1891, Hannibal Hamlin died.

The death of both Adams and Jefferson on the day accepted as the nation's birthday was a strange coincidence. The day was one neither forgot, for both were among the signers of the immortal document which officially first saw the light just fifty years before their death, both remembered the date, and each was cognizant of the other's mortal illness.

Adams was past 90. Jefferson was about seven years younger. Yet he had thirteen years more than the threescore and ten years allotted by holy writ. At midnight eighty years ago, when Independence day was just being ushered in, Jefferson, even then dying, but with memory not yet altogether impaired, muttered, "This is the Fourth of July." In the morning Adams, the same thought apparently running through his mind, roused himself to ask, "Does Jefferson still live?" Adams died a little after midday, Jefferson a few hours later.

Sky Rocket Philosophy.

The boy who was burned last year has a short memory.

It is estimated that there are 80,000,000 horses in the world. This is a good day to leave the skittish ones in the barn.

The poet who wrote, "If you're waking call me early," lived in a country where they didn't celebrate the Glorious.

If there is one particular thing that a boy doesn't want to be on the Fourth of July it is a girl.

Wouldn't an old-fashioned celebration leave a good taste in the mouth?

Throw the ear trumpet away; you will not need it to-morrow.

We have forgiven the British long ago for licking them.

We should pause for a moment in our frenzied celebrations and solemnly reflect on the great truth that Christmas is coming.

YOU STARTED IT, UNCLE.

When We Are All Children.

The Fatal Fourth.

During the five celebrations of the Fourth of July from 1903 to 1907, inclusive, 21,520 persons were injured and 1,153 killed, according to statistics just gathered. The giant firecracker alone injured 1,489 persons in the celebration of 1907, killed eight and led to the death of eight more from lockjaw. So says one of the medical papers. A little thought beforehand will be better than a sorrowful recollection of the facts on July 4. Do not get out of the habit of celebrating the Fourth of July, but try to make it a celebration without an undertaker's bill.—Buffalo Express.

The War of the Chesapeake.

The war of 1812 sometimes is called the war of the Chesapeake. Several years before war was declared she was on a practice cruise across the Atlantic. She was challenged by a British ship of war and ordered to give up four men who had deserted from the British navy. Captain Barron, her commander, refused. The British vessel opened fire, killing and wounding a number of Americans. After an ineffectual defense the Chesapeake struck her colors to the Briton and delivered up the men wanted. Three of these were American citizens who had been impressed into the British service. It was such infamous acts as these on the part of Great Britain that caused the war of 1812.

How to Treat Injuries.

Surgeon General Wyman, of the Marine Hospital and Public Health Service, in a circular, gives instructions as to the treatment of Fourth of July injuries. Dr. Wyman suggests the injury be treated in this way:

"Incise freely every wound.

"Carefully and thoroughly remove from the wound every particle of foreign matter.

"Cauterize the wound thoroughly with a 25 per cent solution of carbolic acid.

"Give a full dose of anti-tetanic serum."

He is a man of power who, when all his fellows are swayed by some ambition or passion, remains calm and unmoved.—Creston.

THE FIFTH OF JULY—CALLING THE ROLL.

(Adapted from a Famous Old Poem.)

"Benjamin Jones!" the father cried;
"Here!" was the answer loud and clear,
From the lips of a youngster standing near;
And "here!" was the word the next replied.

"Johnnie Jones!" and a silence fell
This time, no answer followed the call;
Only his brother saw him fall,
Killed or wounded, he could not tell.

There they stood in the morning light
On July the fifth, the present year,
And the roll was read in accents clear
By the senior Jones, who was ghastly white.

"Charley Jones!" At the call there came
Two ambulance men and some doleful groans
As they bore in the body of Charley Jones,
Greatly disfigured, to answer his name.

"Albert Jones!" and a voice said "here!"
"Chauncey Jones!" "He's down at St. Luke's
With a couple of badly damaged 'dukes,'
The doctors say he'll be well next year."

"William Jones!"—then some one said;
"A small toy pistol went off and shot him,
And the ambulance people hurried and got him
To make some repairs on his injured head."

'Twas a gallant day but it cost us dear;
For that family roll when called to-day,
Of a total of seven that entered the fray,
Numbered but four that answered "here!"
—Chicago Tribune.

Onion Egg.

Boil one dozen eggs quite hard, slice and fry in butter six large onions, slice ten of the eggs, keeping two of them for seasoning, drain the fried onions and lay them on a dish with the sliced eggs placed over them; cover the dish and keep hot. Grate the yolks of the remaining two eggs and mix with sweet cream a little grated nutmeg and a little red pepper. Boil this mixture in a small saucepan one minute, pour over the eggs and onions and send to the table hot.

Measuring One Cup.

Young housekeepers are often at a loss when a recipe calls for a cup of anything to tell what kind of a cup to use or how much a cup measures.

The accepted measure is a stone kitchen cup and means that cup filled to the brim. It is equal to one-half pint.

A cup of solid buttermilk, chopped meat or granulated sugar is equal to about half a pound. A cup of sifted flour is equal to a quarter of a pound.

Swedish Cookies.

One large glass of maple syrup, one-half pound of granulated sugar, one teaspoon of cloves, one teaspoon of ginger, one teaspoon of cinnamon. Cook until they hold together when tried in water. Take off fire and beat in one-half pound of butter. When cold, beat in three eggs and enough flour of bicarbonate of potash dissolved in water. Stand over night. In the morning, if necessary, add a little flour. Roll, cut thin and bake.

Scalloped Onions.

Peel one quart of small onions and cook in boiling salted water until tender. If they are very strong change the water once or twice while cooking. When done, drain and pour them into a buttered baking dish. Pour over them one and one-half cups of white sauce. Cover with buttered bread crumbs and bake until nicely browned.

Shad Roe Salad.

After the parboiled roes are chilled cut into slices, sprinkle with salt and pepper and marinate with a little lemon juice. Keep in a cold place several hours. Line a salad bowl with lettuce leaves, mix a little watercress or parsley with the prepared roes and lay in the center of the leaves. Cover with mayonnaise or a French dressing.

Peanut Sandwiches.

Shell and skin freshly roasted peanuts and roll them to fine crumbs on a pastry board. Add salt to taste, and mix the powdered nuts with enough fresh cream cheese to make a paste that can be easily spread on unbuttered bread. Keep in a cold, damp place until wanted.

Raised Rolls.

One quart of bread dough, when it is molded for the last raising; mold in a cupful of maple sugar, one-quarter teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of butter. Let it rise and mold again and cut out, rise and bake. These are very nice.

To Preserve Brooms.

Dip your broom for a minute or two in your wash boiler of boiling suds once a week and it will last much longer, making it tough and pliable. Carpets or rugs will wear much longer swept with a broom cared for in this manner.

Short Suggestions.

Strong tea will stop bleeding from a cut.

Lavender scented sheets are said to induce slumber.

Try tomato juice instead of milk for the omelet.

A shampoo made of egg, quinine and green soap is good.

A little ammonia in the water will make window cleaning easy.

If clothespins are heated in the oven they will not stick when used.

If the nails have a tendency to break, try rubbing with vaseline every night.

In washing remember that closely woven goods require less starch than others.

Pistache nuts salted in the shell are a dainty addition to the luncheon or dinner menu.

To make a cake flavored with coffee use strong coffee in place of milk in mixing the batter.

A novelty in a table crumb brush is fashioned after a carpet sweeper. It is made of brass.

To candy lemon peel boil it in sugar and then expose to the air until the sugar crystallizes.

A piece of asbestos or of leather is excellent to slip between the filling when making iron holders.

By soaking beans, peas and other dried vegetables thoroughly much fuel will be saved in the cooking.

Warm water should be used with yeast, while with cream of tartar and soda only cold water should be used.

Mayonnaise dressing will keep for several days if it is put into an air-tight jar and kept in a cool place.

Do not throw away the cracked fruit jars, since they make neat receptacles for holding dry food in the pantry.

Any brick work rinsed off with ammonia and water and then carefully dried will be wonderfully brightened by the process.

In cleaning fabrics great care should be taken not to rub them roughly between the hands. The gentle rubbing on of the solvent with a fresh cloth is sufficient.

To take out wagon grease, which is of two kinds, that made from coal tar may be removed from cloth by application of petroleum; the other, made from animal fat, responds to a sponging with ether.

INTOLERABLE ITCHING.

Fearful Eczema All Over Baby's Face — Professional Treatment Failed—Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"When my little girl was six months old I noticed small red spots on her right cheek. They grew so large that I sent for the doctor, but instead of helping the eruption, his ointment seemed to make it worse. Then I went to a second doctor who said it was eczema. He also gave me an ointment which did not help either. The disease spread all over the face and the eyes began to swell. The itching grew intolerable and it was a terrible sight to see. I consulted doctors for months, but they were unable to cure the baby. I paid out from $20 to $30 without relief. One evening I began to use the Cuticura Remedies. The next morning the baby's face was all white instead of red. I continued until the eczema entirely disappeared. Mrs. P. E. Gumbin, Sheldon, Ia., July 13, 1908."

Record Catch of Fish.

A section of the fleet of schooners which came here from New York and New England after bluefish struck great luck one night recently about three miles off Cape Henry, a Norfolk (Va.) dispatch to the New York Herald says. They ran into a vast school of striped sea trout which were entering Chesapeake Bay and with purse nets took thousands of them.

Louis Feuerstein, a dealer and expert, places the catch brought here at about 2,000 barrels of 200 pounds each. The schooner Latonia had 600 barrels, and the Bertha and Pearl and the Libble each 200 barrels. The fish weighed from four to eight pounds each. Hundreds of barrels of them packed in ice were sent by express to New York, Baltimore and other markets north and west of Norfolk.

The Bertha and Pearl would have taken many more of the fish which were swimming near the surface, had not an able fisherman, Gus Delaney, fallen from the seine boat into the seine and caused his comrades to loose the school while they were seining him. When the net was hauled and Delaney landed aboard he was nearly all in, but is recovering.

"In a pinch use Allen's Foot-Ease," remarked the tramp, as he threw a package of white powder into the eyes of the policeman who was about to arrest him.—The Harvard Lampoon.

First Coffee in Europe.

The first cup of coffee was drunk in Europe at Venice toward the end of the sixteenth century. The Venetian chronicler Morosini, in his records of the events in the year 1585, mentions the beverage called "cavee" drunk by the Turks and noted for its anti-soporific qualities.

In the year 1591 a Venetian doctor introduced the berries from Egypt, taught his countrymen how to crush them and brew the beverage, and the use of coffee soon became general, so much so in fact that Venice was full of coffee houses where the people idled away their days drinking the aromatic beverage.

A peculiarity of the Venetian coffee houses was that their patrons did not pay for each cup of coffee they drank, but settled their bills for all the coffee consumed at the end of each year. The regular price of a cup of coffee was five soldi, about 2½ cents, and in some of the old cafes of Venice to-day the same price is still charged.

CURE YOUR KIDNEYS

Do Not Endanger Life When a Butler Citizen Shows You the Cure

Why will people continue to suffer the agonies of kidney complaint, backache, urinary disorders, lameness, headaches, languor, why allow themselves to become chronic invalids when a certain cure is offered them?

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use, because it gives to the kidneys the help they need to perform their work.

If you have any, even one, of the symptoms of kidney diseases, cure yourself now, before diabetes, dropsy or Bright's disease sets in. Read this Butler testimony:

Mrs. A. F. Hand, of Butler, Ind., says: "I was bothered for a long time by kidney complaint and an almost constant pain through the small of my back. The passages of the kidney secretions were very irregular and caused me great annoyance. Doan's Kidney Pills which I procured at Stone's drug store, did more toward relieving me than any other medicine I had ever used and in 1902, I publicly endorsed them. At this time I still hold a good opinion of the remedy as I have used it on several occasions since when having backache and it has never failed to bring me relief."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 26-2

Confusion.

Lillian Braithwaite Hill, the noted writer of humorous advertisements, replied, at a banquet of haberdashers in St. Joseph, to an attack, by a business rival, on advertising humor.

"My friend," said Miss Hill, "says the public wants seriousness, not humor, in its 'ads.' But he contradicts himself horribly as he states his case. His facts seem to me as confused and absurd as the obituary of his wife's death that a Milwaukee man sent to a Milwaukee editor I know.

"This obituary said:

"'Mine wife Gretchen is dead. If she had lived till next Friday she'd been dead just two weeks yet. As a tree falls, so must it stand.'"

BUFFALO BILL AND PAWNEE BILL

Will Bring Their Combined Wild West and Far East Exhibition to Fort Wayne, July 7

An event of unusual interest to people in this vicinity will be the engagement of Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East as noted in the above headlines. Varied and wonderful will be the several spectacular scenes and the entire exhibition will take on an educational and historic character, which gives it an interest possessed by no other tented exhibition. An oriental spectacle of gorgeous splendors will be interpreted by groups and delegations from the Far East, introducing Rossi's Musical Elephants as the particular feature of the oriental scene. The Battle of Summit Springs, a reproduction of the historic Indian conflict in which Buffalo Bill killed Chief Tall Bull, of the Dog Soldiers, will be the principal Wild West scene, participated in by Col. Wm. F. Cody, the original and only Buffalo Bill, who will re enact his original part. The Great Train Hold-Up by Indians will picture an early epoch in railroad building, and A Holiday at "T-E" Ranch will typify the pleasures and pastimes of the plainsmen. The World's Roughriders, led in person at every performance by Buffalo Bill, who positively appears, no matter what the weather, will embrace equestrian experts from the world's equestrian nations. Wild riding Bedouins from the sands of Sahara, and the reckless aboriginee from our own rolling prairies will ride side by side; both sides of the earth will be typified and the saddleship of many nations will be brought into immediate comparison. Every item in the program of the wild west and Far East is real and authentic. The cavalry charges, artillery drills, war dances, rough riding and Oriental pageants are real and accurate in every detail. The tepees of the Indians are the real prairie homes of the redmen; the trappings of the ponies, the camp outfits, and every stick and stitch of the equipment is just what it is represented to be. And the feature of features will be the appearance in the saddle, at every performance, of the real and genuine Buffalo Bill, the last of the great scouts. Arrangements have been made with the railroad officials to run special excursions and reduced round-trip rates, so that everybody who so desires may take advantage of their opportunity to visit this world renowned exhibition.

Happy Homes

Unhappiness and poverty in families is often due to constant sickness. Disease usually starts somewhere in the stomach or intestines, and if you will take a remedy like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at the first approach of chronic constipation, indigestion, liver trouble, sick headache, etc., you are very sure not to have a serious disease. The remedy is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 26-1m

Obituary

Ruhanna (Knisely) Houlton, daughter of William and Susan Knisely, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, September 19, 1837, and died at her home in Franklin township, DeKalb county, Indiana, June 23, 1909, aged 71 years, 9 months and 4 days.

She came to Indiana with her parents in 1841, at the age of four years and settled in Troy township where she grew to womanhood and secured a common school education. After teaching a short time she was united in marriage to Dr. T. T. McCurdy who enlisted in the war of the Rebellion and died Jan. 1, 1863, at Murfeesboro, Tennessee.

She then lived with her brother and sister until December 15, 1867, when she was united in marriage to William L. Houlton, of Franklin township, DeKalb county, Indiana. To this union were born three children, Charles A who died in infancy, John M. and Maud N.

Mrs. Houlton was a member of the Lutheran church in youth after which for convenience she united with the Methodist church at Memorial Chapel. In 1895, she was baptized into the Church of Christ at Hamilton, Ind., where she has remained a faithful member, stating in her last hour that "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." She was a faithful wife, a kind neighbor and a devoted loving mother. She was also a member of the Daughters of Rebekah at Hamilton Lodge, No. 315.

She leaves to mourn her departure a husband, two children, one stepdaughter, one grandson, two sisters, three half-brothers and a host of friends and neighbors.

Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; they rest from their labors and their works do follow them.

The funeral services were held at Hamilton in the M. E. church by her pastor, Rev. F. A. Thomas, of the Christian church. Interment in the Eddy cemetery near her home.

Obituary

Mrs. Mary Bordner died at her home on West Oak street on Monday morning, June 28, 1909, at the age of 73 years. The deceased, whose maiden name was Mary Maze, was born May 6, 1836, at Medina, Ohio. She was married January 28, 1857, to Johnathan Bordner, of Newville, Ind. During her many years of residence at Butler she has attached to herself a host of neighbors and friends who will long remember her for the many acts of loving kindness and the sacrifices she made in their behalf. For years she has been a loyal member of the Christian church and could be depended upon to co-operate with other christian workers in advancing the Master's kingdom. During her long illness of over a year she many times bore testimony to the fact that heaven's blessings could be depended upon for a staff of strength for every phase of human experience. She leaves to mourn her decease a brother, Davis Maze, of Esperian, Mich., and a sister, Mrs. Anna Thomas, of Hale, Missouri, and the following children: Chas. E. Bordner, of Tucker, Utah; Wm. W. Bordner, of Butte, Mont.; Harry D. Bordner, of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Mrs. Edna M. Mock, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Mrs. Francis Plowe, of Butler, Ind.

The funeral services were held from her late home on West Oak street, on Wednesday afternoon at 3:00 p. m., S. B. Braden, Minister of the Christian church officiating. The interment was made at Butler cemetery.

There is no Death! What seems so is transition.

Looking Ahead

The Indianapolis News credits the Anti-Saloon League with an intention to ask both the republican and democratic parties to adopt a plank in their next state platforms in favor of state prohibition. As nothing was said about asking the prohibition party to make such a declaration, it is not known just where, in the opinion of the League, that organization is to come in.

As the anti-saloon forces worked hand in hand with the republican party in the late state campaign and gave that party's candidates their support, they have some claim upon it in making preparations for their prohibition campaign, but they have none upon the democratic party, which they viciously assailed because it would not depart from its long-settled policy of declaring the principle of local self-government.

Of course the campaign of 1908 has passed into history, but the last expression of the democratic state convention is, if platforms still mean something, party law until it has been changed by the power that made it. The convention of 1910 will take such action as pleases it, but it will hardly contend with the republicans for the doubtful honor of robbing the prohibition organization of its one little ewe lamb. Nor can it, with any sort of self-respect, beg leave to consort with the republicans in their chosen pasture, however, green and juicy it may seem at first blush. Mere expediency has never been a besetting democratic sin.

MRS JOHN POTTER,
MRS. E. C. MURPHY, } Com.
Mrs. W. C. WEBSTER.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Rosenberry, of Hamilton, former residents of Butler, are the proud parents of a seven pound baby girl, born June 28, 1909.

The Fourth of July celebration, which had been a continuous performance for two weeks, culminated last Saturday night in a very lively time. Some of the village "cut-ups" were very active and their antics were, to say the least, a trifle unbecoming. The police were unable to stop the awful uproar and citizens were greatly annoyed by the terrible explosions which resembled the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius during the destruction of Pompeii. The boys paid no attention to the warning given by Mayor Webster and made night hideous by their wild pranks. We have always enjoyed seeing people have a good time, but when it comes to raising hell on such a gigantic scale we think it is time to draw the line. Fortunately no one was injured.

Death of Mrs. Alice Fausett

The call of death came quickly to Mrs. Alice Fausett, of Waterloo, Monday evening, June 28. It was a shock to the entire community to learn late Monday afternoon that almost without warning death had entered the home of Dexter A. Fausett and taken away the wife and mother.

Mrs. Fausett was in her usual health Sunday and in the evening after attending services at the Evangelical church, called at the home of her husband's father and sister, leaving at nine o'clock or a few moments later. At ten o'clock a physician had been summoned and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Cora Stanly, was at her bedside helping care for her, so suddenly stricken. Monday it was decided to take her to the hospital, but before the hurried preparations could be completed the signs of approaching dissolution told it was in vain. She lingered the afternoon in a semi conscious condition and at six o'clock she breathed her last, after an illness of less than twenty-four hours.

The funeral was held at the Evangelical church, Wednesday afternoon, which was filled to overflowing. Rev. Zuber, pastor of the church, gave a brief and impressive address. The church choir consisting of Mesdames Blucher, Bachtel and Ruffner, Miss Edna Goodwin and Messrs. Myers and Seery sang two beautiful and appropriate selections. The officers of the Eastern Star then took their places around the casket and gave the impressive funeral service of the order which closed with the singing of the beautiful hymn "Nearer My God to Thee."

Gathering around the open grave of their departed sister, the Pythian Sisters performed the last sad rites of the burial service and all that was mortal of her whom they had known as a sister and friend was consigned to the silent tomb.

The floral offerings were many of rare beauty. Both the orders of which the deceased was a member sent flowers of exquisite loveliness and from other societies, from friends and neighbors came many of these beautiful tributes.

OBITUARY

Alice May Shultz, daughter of Curtis S. and Christena Shultz, was born in Franklin township, DeKalb county, Indiana, Feb. 5, 1872, died at her home in Waterloo, June 28, 1909, aged 37 years, 4 months and 23 days.

She was united in marriage to Dexter A. Fausett, December 24, 1896, and leaves to mourn their loss her husband, her daughter, Erma, father, mother and one brother. One son and one brother preceded her to the better world.

She was converted and joined the M. E. church under the pastorate of Rev. W. P. Herron, at Memorial Chapel, at the age of sixteen years. Upon moving to Waterloo she took up church fellowship with the Evangelical church and remained a faithful christian until her death.

During her sickness and affliction she made very little or no complaint, and in her death her husband loses a loving wife, her daughter a devoted mother, her parents a faithful daughter and society a useful member.

In the church she was a zealous worker, ready to do her share and more. She taught a Sunday school class continuously while living at Waterlao and was an active, useful member of the Aid Society, serving as secretary and president. She will be missed not only by family and kindred, but by many loving friends.

The Country Editor

How does the small town editor make the newspaper he does, is a question that has been often asked and never answered in but one way, says the Geauga (O.) Record.

By hard work. He is his own editor, reporter, business manager, foreman, mailing clerk and frequently compositor. Alone, or with an assistant, he turns out every week a paper, which, while perhaps not brilliant, still contains all the general news of the day, and all the news of the locality.

The paper has an influence far greater in proportion to its circulation than any of the great metropolitan dailies, and it has done more to educate and reform the people than the churches and public schools.

The overworked country editor is not properly appreciated, for he does more for the community in which he lives than any other individual. He must have a firm belief in a reward hereafter, or his nerve would desert him early in his career.

NEW QUAKE SHAKES THE ISLAND OF SICILY

Shocks in Messina Crumble Walls and Drive Out Many in State of Panic.

ROAR LIKE THE BOOM OF GUNS

Some of the Tremblings More Severe than Those of Disaster of December 28.

Sicily was the scene Thursday of another earthquake disaster which, in Messina at least, completed the destruction wrought by the shocks of Dec. 28, in which tens of thousands of lives were lost.

The instruments at the observatory registered a total of ten shocks of varying severity since 7:20 o'clock Thursday morning. Eight shocks were felt during the night. News that has come in there from the provinces shows that damage has been wrought there, but it is as yet impossible correctly to estimate the extent of the losses. The shocks both at Messina and at Reggio created a great panic among the people of these two cities.

Houses Fall; People in Flight.

Walls of houses not completely demolished in the visitation of last winter were shaken down, and the inhabitants of the towns rushed from the streets toward the open country. A woman and a child caught under the wreckage sustained serious injury, the woman subsequently dying. The earthquakes have been becoming more intense recently, and Wednesday night they were sufficiently severe to cause alarm.

The shocks of Thursday morning were undulating and vertical, and accompanied by deep roaring sounds. The first one was followed by an explosion like the roar of cannon and lasted between eight and ten seconds. It is said that this quake was of greater severity than the fatal one of the night of Dec. 28. The wooden houses and huts erected for the accommodation of the people seemed to be thrown from one side to another. Cries filled the air as the people fled into the road.

As on the night of Dec. 28, the first shock was followed by a circular movement of the ground. Five minutes later there came another quake, accompanied by further roarings. This completed the destruction. The remains of wrecked houses collapsed and the entire district was covered by a dense cloud of dust.

Recalls Last Winter's Upheaval.

News of the latest shock in Messina brings vividly to mind the disaster of last December. Positive knowledge of the number of persons killed and the damage done to property was never obtained. It is known for certain that the dead exceeded 100,000, while scores of cities and towns in Calabria and Sicily were left in ruins.

SPURNS H. H. ROGERS' FORTUNE.

Blacksmith Brother of Late Millionaire Wants None of Money.

"I do not want a penny of my brother's money," declared Edward Rogers, blacksmith and brother of the late Henry H. Rogers, of Standard Oil millions. A number of letters have been sent to Rogers by his brother's attorneys which Rogers has refused to take out of the postoffice. Rogers, who has been running a blacksmith shop at Watonga, Okla., for a number of years, has felt very bitter toward Henry H. Rogers. The estrangement dates ten years back, and occurred while Henry Rogers was on a visit to his brother's home. Ed Rogers was not at home at the time. The blacksmith's son asked Henry Rogers for a loan for his father, which was refused. This angered Ed Rogers, and he swore that his brother should never set foot in his home again. Rogers says he has been offered a government job at Fort Sill at $90 a month, with $15 a month for rations, and will probably take it.

9 REPORTED DEAD IN TORNADO.

Scores Injured and Many Buildings Wrecked Near Niles, N. D.

Scores of persons were injured and farm buildings within a radius of sixteen miles were destroyed by a series of tornadoes which swept over Niles, Benson County, N. D., Tuesday evening. Unconfirmed reports from Leeds say eight persons were killed and a report was received from Minnewaukon that one woman was killed and a number were injured, and that the town was destroyed. These reports cannot be verified, as wires are down. The twisters followed at intervals of a few minutes. Between twenty and thirty farmhouses are wrecks and fifty telegraph poles are snapped off. The six members of the family of Erick Urness, near Niles, were injured and Mrs. Urness may not live. The youngest child was found wrapped up in a bundle of barbed wire.

DEATH RIDES RAIL WITH 663.

In Three Months 2,084 Trains Collide and $1,847,202 Is Damage.

An increase of 344 in the total of railroad casualties, but a decrease of sixty-five in the total of persons killed, as compared with the figures for the corresponding quarter last year is shown for the months of January, February and March, 1909, by accident bulletin No. 31, issued by the interstate commerce commission in Washington, D. C. During the months named 663 persons were killed and 15,122 injured. The number of collisions was 1,042 and there were 1,242 derailments. Of these 168 collisions and 145 derailments affected passenger trains. The damage done by these accidents aggregated $1,847,202.

New arrangements will be made whereby American bankers may participate.

MURDER IS OUTCOME OF JOKE.

Victim Resents Placard, Slaps Office Mate and Is Shot Dead.

E. C. Williams, representative in Atlanta, Ga., of the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York, slapped the face of Donald M. Bain, a leading insurance man, 68 years old and nearly thirty years his senior. Within a few moments he was dead from a shot through the brain at the hands of Bain. The shooting took place in an office in the Prudential Building and was the result of a trifling practical joke. Williams had returned to his office to find on his desk a placard reading: "Out of town—in Milledgeville." The State asylum for lunatics is at Milledgeville and Williams resented the implication he saw in the placard. He taxed Bain with being its author. The men quarreled and the encounter and shooting followed. Bain gave himself up to the police.

The possession of the Helgelein money was cinched by evidence introduced proving that in January, 1908, Mrs. Gunness made efforts to convert $1,500 in gold into currency. The only gold she ever received was that which had been paid to her by Helgelein.

The car had been borrowed for the trip by George Olney. It was going at high speed, when a passenger stepped from a trolley car directly in front of it. A sudden twist of the steering wheel to avoid hitting the passenger sent the automobile skidding against a curb, the car was overturned and its occupants thrown out or pinned under it. Olney disappeared after the crash.

MRS. TUCKER OBTAINS DIVORCE.

Remarkably Brief Hearing Ends in the Entering of Decree.

Mary Elizabeth Logan Tucker, daughter of Gen. John A. Logan of Civil War fame, was granted an absolute divorce Tuesday from Col. William F. Tucker, U. S. A., retired, on the ground of desertion. Judge Barnes entered the decree in the Superior Court in Chicago. Mrs. Tucker was given the right to resume her maiden name. The hearing was remarkably brief. Mrs. Tucker and her mother, Mrs. Logan, were the only witnesses. In lieu of alimony the former received real estate from the colonel said to be worth about $5,000. Col. Tucker was retired from active service last spring and given a pension of $3,750 a year.

TO SAVE LIFE FOR DEATH.

Surgeons Operate on Convicted Murderer So He May Be Executed.

The execution of Joseph West of Dayton, Ohio, condemned to be electrocuted July 9 for the murder of his sweetheart, will have to be postponed because of an operation by the penitentiary physician to save his life. West has been suffering with septic poisoning in one of his knees, and it was decided that amputation alone would prevent the malady from spreading. West will not have recovered sufficiently by July 9, physicians say, to be able to go to the electric chair, and Gov. Harmon will be compelled to grant a reprieve.

Work of Congress

The Senate Monday afternoon concluded discussion of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and the finance committee's income tax constitutional amendment was presented. This amendment with the corporation tax, which is already before the Senate, constitutes the program in the upper House. On motion of Senator McLaurin cotton bagging was put on the free list. Senator Culverson moved to put cotton ties on the free list, but this was defeated 31 to 38. The duty on structural iron and steel valued at more than nine-tenths of a cent a pound was increased from three-tenths to four-tenths of a cent a pound. Ineffectual efforts were made to have school books and salt placed on the free and Egyptian cotton on the dutiable list. After adopting the conference report on the census bill the House adjourned at 12:35 p. m. until Thursday. No other business, except the introduction of bills and resolutions, was attempted.

-:—:-

The most important development in the Senate Tuesday was the announcement of Senator Aldrich that he was advocating the corporation tax as a means of defeating the income tax. He denied, however, that the corporation tax was a subterfuge, as the Democrats were quick to charge, and defended it as a legitimate means of raising revenue. Mr. Aldrich said he expected a deficit for the next year or two, and that the corporation tax would help meet that and then might be abolished. The corporation tax measure was put before the Senate in the stage of a "third-degree" amendment, which precludes further amendments. The tariff schedules were completed, the last vote to be taken being on Senator Tillman's proposition for a duty of 10 cents a pound on tea. Although Senator Tillman made a long and strenuous fight, his plan was lost, 55 to 18. At adjournment at 6:17 Senator Cummins was speaking on the income tax. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

Income tax was practically the only subject, and Senators Cummins of Iowa and Borah of Idaho the only speakers before the Senate Wednesday. Mr. Borah was not heard until toward the close of the day's session, when the Iowa Senator yielded the floor, which he had held since the previous day. He took for his text the declaration made by Senator Aldrich to the effect that he would vote for the corporation tax amendment only as a means of defeating the income tax, and, without resorting to personalities, he criticised the position of the chairman of the finance committee, who had presented the corporation tax amendment to the Senate. Mr. Cummins also paid his respects to Mr. Aldrich on account of his avowal. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

But for objection from Senator Bulkeley the Senate would probably have come to an agreement to vote the next Tuesday on the entire income tax amendment to the tariff bill. Senator Bulkeley is opposed to the amendment, and as he expects to be out of the city Tuesday he would not consent to have a vote taken at that time. There were several speeches for and against the measure, Mr. Borah concluding his argument begun Wednesday. Mr. Root advocated the corporation tax, Mr. Clapp and Mr. Owen the income tax and Senator Flint and several others made incidental remarks. The House met, approved the journal, listened to Chaplain Couden's prayer, received a routine message from the President, declined to consider a bridge bill brought up by Representative Hobson of Alabama, and adjourned within twelve minutes.

-:—:-

The corporation tax amendment was made an integral part of the pending tariff bill Friday by a vote of 59 to 11. The test vote came earlier on the substitution of the corporation tax for the income tax, and on this the vote stood 45 to 31. The debate was sharp at times, but with Mr. Aldrich back from his brief vacation and in full control the result was never in serious doubt. Among the speakers were Heyburn, Hughes, Cummins, Newlands, Rayner, Brandegee, Root and Aldrich. The House was not in session.

ASSERTS BODY IS LEON LING'S

Man Who Knew Alleged Murderer of Miss Sigel Identifies Corpse.

That the body of the Chinaman found in the Hudson River is that of Leon Ling, alleged murderer of Miss Elsie Sigel, is affirmed by a reporter who viewed the body in the Fordham morgue in New York. "This is undoubtedly the body of Leon Ling," said he. "I knew him well at Fort George all last summer. He was running a pin game there. I recognize him particularly by his hair, and generally by his appearance. If I could see his teeth, which were very fine and regular, I could make this identification doubly positive. I have no doubt that this is Ling."

In the effort to establish the identity fully, several other persons who knew Leon well were taken to the morgue to view the body. The height, weight, complexion and certain peculiarities of physical appearance of the dead man corresponded with those attributed to Leon. The absence of clothing on the drowned man, except for a silk undershirt, was one of the baffling features of the case.

Detective Van Wagener of Capt. Carey's staff took a boy who knew Ling to the morgue, but the lad said the body was not that of Ling. Because of the action of the water on the body the detectives believe the boy might be mistaken.

SOCIALIST WARREN SENTENCED.

Given Six Months in Jail and Fined $1,500—Will Appeal.

Fred Warren, business manager of the Appeal to Reason, a Socialist paper published at Girard, Kan., was sentenced to six months in jail and a fine of $1,500 by Judge Pollock in the Federal Court in Fort Scott, Kan. Several weeks ago Warren was arrested for alleged violation of the postal regulations in sending through the mails a printed offer of a reward of $1,000 to anyone who would kidnap former Governor William S. Taylor, of Kentucky, and return him to that State. A motion for a new trial was overruled and an appeal will be taken. The Socialists of the country have pledged $35,000 to support Warren in his defense.

Wyllie, who had held important Indian appointments, was instantly killed. Dr. Lalcaca died on the way to the hospital. The assassin was seized and held until the arrival of the police. It is believed that the crime was the result of the recent Bengal revolutionary agitation.

The monthly statement of the treasury shows that at the close of the fiscal year June 30, the public debt, less cash in the treasury, amounted to $1,014,861,531, a decrease for the month of $6,268,079. The total receipts for the month were $56,857,376 and the disbursements $47,781,697.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Midyear conditions reflect steady progress and an encouraging outlook in commerce. July payments of interest and dividends cause very high total clearings and credits show further strengthening in a lower record of failures. Anticipations for the future course of business now depend very largely upon good crops.

Wholesale dealings in the principal necessaries for fall deliveries exceed those recorded a year ago. Advancing prices stimulate more general demand for dry goods and collateral lines, buyers appearing in greater numbers than is customary at this time of year. Bookings show increase in clothing, woolens, silks, footwear and housewares. Furniture exhibits present an unusually attractive display and the July sales are likely to surpass former records. Sales of food furnish a favorable comparison and there is also an improved tone in jewelry, artwares and other luxuries. The disposition of vacation and sporting goods has been exceptionally good. Western demands for ordinary needs and for improvements on the farms assure increasing outlays. Consumption generally has attained a higher level and the purchasing power is distinctly favorable to sustained expansion in the principal branches of distribution.

Developments in the industrial situation include a greater volume of new demands, better prices and additions to the capacity and hands employed. Furnace outputs are now more promptly absorbed. Heavy contracts appear for track equipment, structural steel and steam and electric power. Woodworking lines run upon a steadier basis and there is more absorption of the hard woods and pine. Shipments of leather reflect a wider use.

Bank clearings, $279,109,156, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 17.2 per cent, and compare with $248,653,065 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 23, against 19 last week, 35 in 1908 and 26 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 7 last week, 10 in 1908 and 9 in 1907—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Retail trade has been helped by steady hot weather, holiday preparations and clearance sales, but there are still not lacking reports from many cities that the spring and early summer turnover is below expectations. Jobbing trade is of a mid-summer small filling-in order character. Certainly the largest business visible is that being booked for next fall, winter and spring. In this respect the strength of demand for cotton goods at hardening quotations, partly due to the strength of raw cotton, and the satisfactory reports as to orders booked by woolen and worsted goods manufacturers for next spring delivery at very high prices are by far the notable features. All Western cities report fall bookings larger than last year by various percentages. In industrial lines the gains previously shown seem to be held.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 1 were 213, against 223 last week, 236 in the like week of 1908, 135 in 1907, 134 in 1906 and 127 in 1905.—Bradstreet's.

A Hazard of Hearts

By ALIX JOHN

Copyright, 1900, by Frank Leslie Publishing House

CHAPTER III.—(Continued.)

Stewart's voice grew rather choky, and he paused for a moment. With a sudden impulse, Miss Thorne leant over and lightly touched his arm.

"Thank you," he said, abruptly, and then, recovering himself, went on:

"The priest came from the nearest settlement to bury the poor little chap with all due form. He had christened him when he was born, so that there was no difficulty about that.

"Besides the funeral, he did another priestly job—that of frightening the poor mother into fits with the announcement that the child's death was due to her sin, and with threats of eternal brimstone to follow.

"So having accomplished that nice piece of work, he left us to the contemplation of that little white cross on the hillock opposite the house, and with all the flaming terrors of purgatory rampant between us.

"Luckily for me, harvest time was coming on, and I was too busy by day, and too tired by night to think—but without thinking, there was always the latent knowledge that the purpose I had worked for was gone.

"The harvest was over, and the first winter days were as gloomy inside as out. The poor woman was crushed by priestly terrors, and had once or twice broken out that she must go and ask the nuns to take her into the convent, to end her days there, and make her repentance, and pray for the child's soul. Poor thing, I believe that what mind she had never fully recovered the shock of the child's death.

"It was on this state of affairs, with the long winter ahead of us, that there came a telegram from Orkwell with news of my brother's death—'Home, come home at once. Bring your family,' it ended with. I sat and chuckled over it. It seemed such an irony of fate! And then I blessed God that my boy was dead, and that that woman could not brand him with a cruel name.

"I might have felt some grief for my brother's death, if he had ever been anything to me save a bugbear of respectability held over my erring head.

"All at once a great longing for my old identity came over me. To go back and be my first, my real self again, and let all these hard ten years of ceaseless toil fade into a dream. To go back to a life of ease and pleasure, and assured place. To wear decent clothes and sit at a decent table once more. Then I looked at Mathilde, crouching by the stove, looking more squaw-like with every fresh tear she shed.

"I could give her no place in that new life. I had bought my lesson and knew that my race must be saved from her, but could I desert her? If she had shown one sign of clinging to me, I am not sure but that even then I might have sent back word that I belonged to the new life, and would have set to work to make myself a place in my new country.

"But the fates willed it otherwise. While this ceaseless problem was haunting me through the day's round, I came in one twilight to find the priest in possession—very much in possession, too, for he was about to carry Mathilde off with him. She had her few worldly goods already done up in a bundle, and though she wept and wailed, was quite determined to do.

"So I did my best to get the business through as quickly as possible. I told the priest that I was leaving the country, but would place in his hands a sum for her maintenance. Then I watched them drive off towards the settlement, behind the hillock where the white cross stood up against the dark sky, and went back into the empty house, a free man.

"The next day I cabled to my father that I was coming home at once, and that my boy was dead. As to the wife, I said nothing. Then I put my foreman in charge, and started off to see what was the next move in the game.

"There, do you see anything very heinous in all that?" He turned a look of keen inquiry on his companion, who met it unflinchingly.

"No," she said. "No, I suppose that, judging by men's usual standards, you are not to blame for anything much, so far. "Only," she hesitated, "I do not see how it can possibly fit in with——"

"With you?" he interrupted. "Well, bear with me a little longer. You see, I am now going back, with my family in utter ignorance as to any details of my life.

"My father has no power to do me out of the baronetcy or the estates that go with it, but he can do what he likes with the lands on which are situated the collieries which supply the cash that makes the whole thing worth having. I received just before starting, another of his and my sister-in-law's joint epistles, saying that if he were satisfied that my life was a thoroughly reformed one, he would at once make a will leaving everything to me.

"If, on the contrary, there appeared to have been any dubious events in my recent life, every penny that he had power to will should go to my sister-in-law and to the charities that they are both interested in.

"And so you see, the fat would be in the fire should those two get word of Mathilde.

"My father cannot live very long. He had a second stroke after my brother's death, and is quite helpless. I had made up my mind to tell them that my wife was dead; but even that had its risks. If I were going to say so at all, I should have done so when I sent the first cable, and have got them used to the idea before they met me.

"Anything else, however, means handing over the best part of the property to that woman, and giving her the chance of branding my boy's name. By heaven, she shall never do that!" And the lean, brown hands clenched fiercely at the intolerable thought.

Evidently feeling that the crisis of his confidence had come, he spoke quickly, as though choking back any misgivings. "It was only yesterday that the idea of a new solution dawned upon me. Your answer decides it. Will you marry me as soon as we land, and come to Orkwell and represent my five years' wife?"

Throughout the last half-hour Miss Thorne could not but see these words at the end of the conversation. All the same, they struck her like a blow and a deep, painful flush of shame burned her face.

"As a 'habitant' woman? As the mother of the dead child? It is impossible," she said, her voice sharp with pain.

Stewart watched her closely, but spoke with apparently unabated courage. "Please think it over a little bit before you decide. Surely, the place and position might be worth some sacrifice on your part."

"But not such a sacrifice as that! Tied to a man I have known for a week, and who only professes to use me to further his own plans. Attempting an impossibility in playing a part for which I am utterly unfitted, before the daily scrutiny of a hostile woman! What do I know of how a 'habitant' woman would feel or act in such a position? How could I pretend for a moment to feel a mother's grief?" Again the flush of excitement was lost in the painful wave of crimson. "The whole thing would be exploded in a week," she finished decisively.

For a moment Mr. Stewart looked as though he might, on his side, wax wrathful; then, controlling himself, he spoke persuasively, "I never could have entertained so far-fetched an idea for a moment, if I had not seen how resolute and self-reliant you were—if I had not known how without family ties and hopeful prospects you are.

"If there are difficulties in playing such a part at Orkwell, are there no difficulties ahead of you in the Paris life? And surely, you over-rate these difficulties. You say you cannot play the part of a habitant. You forget that they are totally ignorant of how such a part should be played. You are half French, so you told me. Well, that fact supplies the necessary exotic element in her eyes. She won't expect you to be what you can guess that poor soul to have been. It is not as though it were for long. It is only to give her time to feel that the game is up, and that she had better clear out; and for me to get the will made, and then the difficulties are over."

"And then what becomes of me?" she asked with a hard contempt, to which he responded gravely:

"Then, you are the honored wife of the heir; mistress of my father's house. It is something to consider." There was a pause, then he went on in a gentler voice. "As for being tied to me, I can only say that I should endeavor to repay my indebtedness to you by a loyal consideration; that I make no claim of any kind upon you save of a defensive and offensive alliance. For the rest, you must know that if I had not admired and respected you, I should hardly have been willing to place my future so entirely in your hands.

"Don't you think that, considering all this, you might promise to think it over?"

"I don't know, I don't know," Miss Thorne murmured feebly. All at once there seemed something very forlorn and girlish about her. The lips that had been so firmly set were tremulous, and the grey eyes bright with tears.

A sudden kindly smile heightened the intensity of Mr. Stewart's face.

"Don't be so frightened of me," he urged gently. "On my honor, you can trust me. Surely there are many worse motives in marriage than loyal comradeship on both sides!

"But I have tired you out now. Just promise me that we may talk it over again, and I will go away and leave you in peace."

Miss Thorne was by way of being rather strong-minded, at least she tried to think so herself, often feeling the most feminine weakness when she had best persuaded others of her stony-heartedness.

But now every pretence at stoicism suddenly abandoned her, and left her to gasp out helplessly, "Oh, yes, I promise. Only, please go away now."

As Mr. Stewart walked off to the other end of the deck, she sat with clasped hands, staring at the endless changing curve of the dark waves, and thinking how very simple it would be to walk over the railing, wait until that side dipped low to meet the rising curve, and slip over. In a moment she would be in the white, churning wake of the steamer, and then. But no, that were rank cowardice, and there was that in her blood which made cowardice an impossibility. While youth and strength lasted, she would fight on—when that went, then let all the rest go too.

CHAPTER IV.

The hours of Christmas day rolled on, bringing, the world over, to lonely hearts the retrospective pangs that no amount of scoffing can wholly choke down.

Brighton, Paris, Nice are the means sought by the prosperous, who have need to smother such memories. A novel by the fire, with a masculine pipe or a feminine cup of tea, supply a second-class train to the land of forgetfulness. The third is often an investment of all available cash or family valuables in alcoholic oblivion. But there are hours of darkness when all such attempts to cheat the inner self fail. Hours when the spirit must stand and face its own shattered past, its desolate future—hours when dead hands reach out from grave damp, and touch the heart; and chiller still, comes the breath from shattered ideals, and now hopeless self-possibilities.

It was into some such valley of shadows that Miss Thorne had gone down during that long afternoon spent in her state-room.

The clatter of the lunch hour in the pantry had culminated and subsided, the afternoon had early darkened, and the stewardess, after several futile messages that tea was ready in the saloon, had brought it in, and set it on the trunk beside her, but still Miss Thorne sat staring at the white wooden partition where a selection from her wardrobe swayed to and fro with the ship's motion. It could hardly be called thinking, this vivid realisation that possessed her mind of all her own losses and disillusions: the kindly old father; the dignified, ample home life of which she had been the head; the brothers older than herself and settled in their own homes, who, without much community of interest, had formed a friendly background to her life; and the central figure, the good-looking, cheerful lover, always so humbly devoted to herself, always holding before her eyes the prosperous married life ahead of them. It was strange to remember now how she had grown to lean on his self-confident decisions, and to accept his coloring of the schemes for their future.

It was not more than a month or two since such had been her surroundings, and now they were more scattered than the leaves which had seen them go. Her father was dead, her home broken up. Brothers and their wives had shown a perfunctory interest and kindness which had sometimes seemed a shade worse than open indifference. Offers of a home had not been wanting, but there was not one in which she would not have known her presence to be more tolerated than desired. But brothers and their wives would have mattered little if the central figure of the play could have kept his part of hero.

At first there had been ardent sympathy and every self-forgetful effort to soothe her sorrow, until the girl was filled with remorse at not having better appreciated such devotion. Then came longer intervals between meetings, a depressed dwelling on the difficulties of the future, and the postponement of the marriage. Then there were journeys on the plea of business, and letters full of the disadvantages of long engagements, until in one blinding flash of comprehension, Miss Thorne had seen what it all meant. She sat down at once and wrote a letter which brought back a perfect composition in the way of a sorrowful acquiescence in her decision, and pathetic renunciation of all claims.

She was of the sort in whom contempt kills all affection, and her sister-in-law considered that, in what followed, she showed a great deal of womanly feeling. Boldly and gravely she made known the breaking off of her engagement "by mutual consent." In the same fashion she announced her intention of returning to Paris to resume her studies.

No one tried to prevent her. She was of age, and her small income would suffice with extreme care and economy. In their plentiful Canadian homes her brothers and their wives little guessed the grimness of that phrase, "extreme care and economy," to a solitary woman in a big city. The dreary rooms, the skimped meals, the shabby clothes, the long street trudges in storm or darkening winter weather, the absence of all variety or brightness of life. She knew it all well enough—the girl who was going to face it. She could see now those dingy rooms high up in a big apartment house on the Clichy Heights, which she was to share with an erratic American widow who seemed content to spend the rest of her existence daubing away at hopeless studies among the chattering girls of the studio Katin. She wondered vaguely if Mrs. Silas P. Stark still wore that sleeveless green knitted woolen jacket and the little corkscrew curls at either side of the shrewd, kindly face, and if the rooms had ever been dusted or cleaned since she herself had left them.

GREAT BUSINESS OF STORAGE.

Depression Doesn't Affect This Industry at All Unfavorably.

The storage is an important adjunct of the shipping business. In this city and vicinity there are four big storage plants with railroad connections. Two of them are in Brooklyn, another is on Staten Island and the fourth at Communipaw, on the Jersey side of the Hudson River. Besides those there are a great many bonded and free warehouses without pier and railroad connections in different parts of the borough of Manhattan, says the New York Sun.

Bonded warehouses are for the storage of dutiable goods landed in bond to be held until the consignees find it convenient to pay the duty and take them out. The convenience to merchants of leaving imported goods in bond until they can be disposed of in the ordinary course of trade is manifest. But many merchants also get large consignments of undutiable goods which their private storage facilities cannot accommodate, hence the existence of free-storage warehouses.

However, the two branches of the business are not entirely separate, for all the big companies and many of the smaller isolated warehouses store bonded and free goods. Free goods, it should be borne in mind, may be either domestic or foreign, for many imported commodities are free of duty.

The beginning of the storage business was contemporaneous with the rise of New York in importance as a commercial center. Its growth in the last half-century has been enormous, but the development of the big plants referred to has been comparatively recent. A notable peculiarity of the business is that it does not immediately feel the effects of industrial depression.

On the contrary, it is materially benefited for a time by a decline of general business. When a merchant carrying large lines of goods finds the market for them falling off he generally sends them to storage warehouses for safekeeping until the market improves. For this reason the storage business suffered less than any other during the recent extraordinary period of general stagnation. As a matter of fact the storage business was better in 1908 than in 1907, so it enjoys a unique distinction.

It would be a mistake, however, to infer that the business suffers in good times. In a good business year the volume of merchandise coming to this port from all parts of the world is much greater than in a bad business year, and consequently the aggregate placed in storage is larger, but the length of time the goods are held in storage is shorter. In a bad business year the aggregate of receipts is relatively smaller, but the period of storage is longer.

The inference is inevitable, therefore, that the storage business is a good thing at all times. Perhaps storage men as a whole may not be willing to concur with this statement, but there are the facts.

An Apprehensive Epicure.

"Do you approve of these recent gastronomic fancies, such as humming birds, possum and alligator steaks?"

"No. In a little while I won't be able to read a menu without wondering whether I am attending a dinner or having a nightmare."—Washington Star.

In Doubt.

"How do you plead?" inquired the judge, sternly. "Are you guilty or not guilty?"

"How can I tell?" replied the prisoner. "I haven't had a chance to appeal my case yet."—Detroit Free Press.

Horrible.

"That was an awful disaster. There was only one survivor—isn't that terrible?"

"Tearful. What a bore he'll be!"—Cleveland Leader.

THE HOME AND ITS MISTRESS

The Widow a Good Wife.

Recent statistics indicate that the popularity of the widow is waning; but should this be the case she can most certainly afford to be generous, for her reputed charm has almost become proverbial. There are many instances of the second marriage of widows, and it is noticeable that the husband in such cases frequently happens to be the younger of the two. This is not extraordinary, for women invariably remain young longer than men, and a woman who has encountered the exceedingly enlightening experience of married life knows exactly how to deal with a man. She is intuitive and can instantly diagnose his mood. If he appears worried and distrait, she is tactfully quiet and sympathetic. She does not force his confidence, because she realizes quiet well that he will probably tell her everything later on.

When necessary a widow is more entertaining than a young girl. Her knowledge of life has made her interesting; her experience has sharpened her intellect, and she knows exactly what to say upon each occasion. As a hostess she is usually perfect. Her previous knowledge of married life has necessitated the acquirement of culinary art, and she realizes that a dainty, well-served dinner appeals to a man's soul quite as much as mere beauty of figure. But she is careful not to neglect her own appearance, for she understands that men appreciate elegance as a whole, although they seldom grasp the meaning of detail. Then with regard to the care of the family exchequer, a widow's experience is invaluable. At the expense of much suffering, she has learned the value of money. She knows how and where to buy, and gets good value for her expenditure; and this in itself is a great consideration for a young man.

But perhaps unselfishness is the keynote of the widow's success. She has learned that she is not the all-important factor of the marriage contract. She recognizes that domestic art is her sphere in life, and she appreciates the dignity of her position. In fact, she is a "womanly" woman, and, as a rule, decidedly deserves her popularity.

How annoying it is when baby carelessly lets bits of bread and milk fall upon the tablecloth. How irritating it is to see all one's careful ironing reduced to nothing so soon. It is trying, no doubt. But why not arrange baby's place to prevent accidents? That is easily done and without the assistance of a homely tin waiter, too. The least objectionable protector of tablecloth is made of two oblongs of butcher's linen with an oilcloth interlining. They may be sewed up just like a pillow case, if you prefer, or you might line the improvised tray better if each piece of linen was hemmed. Then two may be sewn together just inside the hem, and one end left open for the insertion of the oilcloth. You will certainly like the arrangement, and baby will rejoice if you allow him to, instead of scolding him too often for faults that tiny hands cannot prevent.

Wooing Slumber.

The weary woman who wishes to woo sleep successfully should try a scented slumber cushion. Cased in a dainty cover of washing silk, the contents vary from vegetable down scented with lavender to the aromatic hop. Other fillings may be substituted at will by those who have access to freshly grown sweet herbs. Lemon thyme, sweet grass, verbena, sweet-scented oak-leaf geranium and clover will all convey a delightful fragrance and can be constantly renewed. They should be slightly pounded before they are placed in the cushion. Newly mown hay gives forth a welcome scent and forms a particularly good stuffing for a slumber cushion. The effect of the foregoing, intensified, if necessary, by a few drops of distilled essence of the same, will be much appreciated by the business woman as well as by the society belle.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

For the princess dresses one should have princess slips.

In yokes the sun-ray plaitings are the thing just now.

Jet bracelets seemingly cannot be too wide nor too heavy.

Frocks of silks, crepe and other unlined materials are weighted down by broadcloth facings.

A gay Beau Brummel frill at the throat transforms the tailored suit into something dainty and feminine.

Some of the skirts are actually shirred upon the waistband. On the other hand, gowns equally smart are being turned out with the straightest of lines from bust to knee.

The Shantung suit is promising as much popularity as ever as soon as the summer weather actually sets in.

The ugly little fish tail train has gone out. In its place is a short square train copied from mediaeval days.

With sleeveless evening frocks scarfs of tulle or chiffon are often worn, tied about the arm halfway between the shoulder and elbow.

The individual linen pockets or bags worn with the summer gown are frequently fastened with cords drawn through embroidered eyelets.

Bran and Oatmeal.

Constantly the advice is given to use bran and oatmeal for softening and whitening the skin, yet comparatively few women know how to use it to the best advantage.

The dry meal can be used on the moistened hands as is soap, but better effects are gained by making it into a wash or lotion.

This is easily done by boiling a large handful of the meal in enough water to form a thin gruel.

The liquid is then strained and used slightly more diluted when the hands are washed.

As these washes quickly sour it is well not to make too large a quantity at once.

To save trouble keep a small alcohol lamp in the bathroom and boil the gruel in a tin vessel just large enough to hold the desired amount.

It can be strained through squares of old muslin, which are later thrown away.

Simple, But Effective.

An excellent model for a good-looking, dressy chapeau. Its construction is simple, but the effect is especially good. The hat is silver gray Neapolitan, trimmed with a crushed band of self-tone Louisine ribbon, and on the left side at the very bottom and partly resting on the hair is a bunch of delicate pink roses and foliage.

Health-Giving Sunshine.

The hygienic and curative effects of sunshine have been found in the rays of the incandescent electric lamp by Miramaont de Laroquette, a French medical man. These rays increase the growth of plants, while destroying low forms like bacteria; and in men and other animals they cause marked stimulation of circulation and skin, increased sweating and cellular activity, and reduce pain. They may heat the air to 150 degrees. The light baths have a sedative action in pressure, and are particularly useful in chronic inflammation, the after effects of infectious disorders, for relieving the pain of neuralgia, and in rheumatism and gout. They promise advantage in obesity and the arterial breaking down of old age.

Women Make Good Farmers.

Mrs. George Cran, an English farmer, went to Canada to look into the work of women farmers in that country and thinks the prospects very bright for women in that work. She tells of one woman who in six years turned a wilderness into a remunerative farm, sixteen acres being in corn six in alfalfa, with oats and barley and other things in the rest of her 600-acre farm. The woman has fifty hives of bees, seventy-five cows and sends all sorts of vegetables to market. She can have a husband, too if she wants one, as she has had many "offers."

Why Men Wear Trousers.

No living man of this age, says the Providence Journal, ever deliberately chose to "adopt trousers." He was forced into them, and all other eccentricities of dress by woman. In the very earliest sartorial experience of every man he is swathed in a queer bundle of incoherent bandages by a woman. Later she puts him into cute little dresses so that the neighbors can't tell him from his little sister. Still later she cuts off his curls and puts him into knickerbockers, and he puts on "long pants" when she gives the word and not before. That is all that man has to do or ever had to do with wearing trousers. Woman forced him into them in the first place, and now he is afraid to wear anything else for fear of making a sensation.

SOME SHORT PARTY DRESSES.

Perhaps, after having learned to make the plain shirtwaist and the simple gingham dress, there is no easier road to progress for the home dressmaker than the way of the party dress. The short dancing frock, in especial, offers untold advantages for the inexperienced and conceals but few pitfalls. The neck, to begin with, is bare, and so, too, are the arms, which cut out the natural enemy of all amateurs—the yoke with its collar, as well as the fitted cuff with its accurate fastenings. This absence of yoke and sleeve eliminates the most expensive part of the gown. Neither the shirred bodice nor the surplice shoulder drapery presents such difficulties as do the fitted bodices for daytime wear.

MILLINERY

One of the prettiest summer girls I know, who seemed to have a hat to match each dainty frock, let me into her secret the other day. Pulling out a big bandbox from under her bed she showed me her summer hats, just two in number. One was a handsome embroidered lingerie affair, and for this she had a bunch of several bows of various ribbons. These she took off and pinned on as needed. The other hat was—but perhaps you know the girl. She will not mind telling you another of her secrets. She found, when making a new hat, that it was difficult to determine whether a shape would be becoming. Therefore before purchasing the material she hopes to use, she covers a hat frame with colored muslin or crepe paper. This method practically solves all the main points to be considered. She learns the amount of silk or cloth necessary for the operation, for she carefully measures the paper or muslin with which she has experimented. She tests the trimmings in the same way, by adjusting ribbons and flowers in varying ways until she has attained the best combination.—American Home Monthly.

To Improve the Complexion.

Oatmeal bags used frequently in the bath are very pleasant; they whiten the skin and impart a velvety softness, besides a delicate fragrance. Formula: Five pounds of oatmeal, one pound of powdered orris root, one pound of almond meal, one-half pound of powdered white castile soap. Keep in glass jars and fill little cheesecloth bags as needed.

The skin of the rat is used for making a fine kind of glove leather.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Counterfeit half dollars are in circulation at Decatur.

For tying up his 12-year-old boy with fish lines about the wrists, so that the lad's toes barely touched the floor, J. E. Lewark, of Anderson, was sentenced to jail for sixty days.

A valuable cow belonging to Joseph Baker, living near Boonville, was killed by lightning in an electric storm in a singular manner. The cow was feeding on grass with her head between two wires of a fence. The lightning struck a tree, ran down the wires of the fence one hundred feet and killed the cow.

The burning out of a fuse in a street car in Terre Haute caused a panic, which resulted in the death of Mrs. Maude Young. In the mad rush of passengers to escape from the car she fell and her neck was broken. Rev W. S. Martin, of Danville, Ill., was dangerously hurt. Mrs. Mary Zellers and A. Elliott were severely injured.

Lew Pearson, of Vincennes, a fisherman, brought a pearl to Evansville which he found in a mussel shell he had taken from the Wabash river and for which he asked $3,000. Several jewelers offered him $2,500 for the pearl, but he refused to sell for this sum. His pearl is the largest found in the Wabash river in many years and is perfect in shape, and there is not a blemish on it.

An illumination of the southeastern heavens startled residents in some parts of Clark County about 9 o'clock one evening last week. What appeared to be a ball of fire as large as the moon moved rapidly across the sky in an easterly direction and vanished suddenly as if by an explosion, leaving a trail of white light in its wake, which remained visible about ten minutes. Former State Senator W. L. Barnes, a local astronomer, believes the phenomenon was a meteor.

A new commodity—crawfish—have made their appearance on the market at Oakland City. Those with big claws and guaranteed pinching qualities are carefully avoided. Common crawfish are selling at 1 cent each, and those with long waving "whiskers" and red eyes at 2 cents each. The latter are of a more value on account of being more attractive to the bass that live in the waterworks lake, where Oakland City's population is now spending its leisure hours. The crawfish are used as bait by the fishermen.

Henry M. Williams, of Fort Wayne, a veteran of the Civil War, and a man of wealth, announces that he will build a statue of Anthony Wayne at the east end of Berry street overlooking the Maumee. It was at this spot, he says, that General Wayne announced his purpose to locate the fort from which the city derived its name. According to Mr. Williams, it was the failure of General St. Clair and General Harmer to hold the juncture of the St. Marys and the St. Joseph rivers against the Indians that determined President Washington to appoint General Wayne to perform the work.

Nobody ever heard of a horse digging potatoes until Walter Rynerson, a Columbus attorney, brought out a story of that kind, and now he is trying to get a patent on the horse. He turned his horse into the lawn to graze, and, instead of keeping on the grass, the horse jumped a fence and entered a potato patch. There it began to roll and kick, selecting hills containing potatoes for its kicking. At the first attempt the animal kicked twenty-four potatoes out of one hill. This seemed to please it considerably, so it continued the work and dug about half the potatoes in the patch.

When the First National Bank at Kewanna was opened last Monday morning the room was found to be full of smoke and, on investigation, it was discovered that the lamp, which is used for the all night light, had exploded and the fuel burned without damage to the interior of the room. It was then learned that the lamp had contained gasoline instead of coal oil and the explosion was heard by many people in the vicinity. This is one instance where the gasoline mistake for coal oil was fortunate as the gasoline burned in exploding and had it been oil the building would doubtless have been burned.

Vivian McClurg, 12 years old, of New Castle, is suffering with severe injuries as the result of being a somnambulist. The injuries consist of bruises and severed muscles in the thigh. The child arose from her bed while asleep and began walking about her room. She stumbled and fell and a sharp object was run into her body, cutting a large gash two inches long and an inch deep and severing several of the thigh muscles. The child has been for some time in the habit of walking in her sleep and a close watch was kept on her. However, those sleeping in the same room were not awakened until she fell.

Hot rays of the afternoon sun, focused by a flaw in the plate glass window of a novelty store at Portland, set off a quantity of cannon crackers, sky rockets and roman candles. The glass was blown from the window.

When Mrs. Sarah Warner was leaving her home in Terre Haute to take a train for California, she found a 3-weeks-old foundling on the porch, and she took it along. Seven years ago a foundling was left on her porch, and she is now raising the child.

Christian Small, aged 5 years, accidentally shot and killed his sister Esta, aged 13. Both were children of Elmer Small, of Jasper, who recently sued the Rev. Louis Fleener, of Tennyson, for $10,000 damages for the alleged breaking up of his home.

Physicians are somewhat puzzled by an epidemic of enlarged throat glands, accompanied by chills and fever, that seems to have attacked hundreds of Muncie residents. An attack of the strange malady lasts ten days, during which the patient's condition is sometimes regarded as serious.

The Goshen Milk Condensing Company has been organized and will erect a $40,000 plant to begin business.

Mildred Armstrong, the 6-year-old daughter of P. S. Armstrong, of Owensville, was bitten by a snake while playing in the orchard, and her condition is critical.

Warsaw has a unique organization called "The Girls of Seventy," and at a recent meeting Mrs. Mary Ebersole, aged 87, sang a Dutch hymn. Ten of the members present on that occasion have a combined age of 864 years.

Chester Robbins, 14, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Robbins, at Elwood, committed suicide recently to escape a whipping. He had stolen some small articles from his father's grocery wagon, and while the father was in search of a switch to chastise him, the lad swallowed carbolic acid, dying almost instantly.

Sion Cavness, one of the oldest men in Daviess County, died last week on a farm in Van Buren Township, where he had lived for the last fifty years. Mr. Cavness was 90 years old and was prominently identified with the early agricultural activities of the county. He is survived by a widow and several children.

A representative of the British government, who is in Muncie gathering social, vital and industrial statistics, is appalled by the fact that in the present term of circuit court in Delaware County forty-one decrees of divorce have been allowed and nine others are still pending. Several divorces were also granted by the Superior Court. A large number of others were refused, or the suits were withdrawn and reconciliations effected.

How would you like to can four hundred gallons of cherries? That's what a Greencastle woman did. The woman is Mrs. Lucy Black, in charge of the dining room of the DePauw girls' dormitory. Mrs. Black is preparing for the students who will board at the "dorm" next winter. She has been in charge of the dining room for many years and is well known by almost every student who has attended DePauw in the last ten years.

Small boys shooting fire crackers at Logansport set fire to Gus Dryer's barn, and while firemen were working on the second story the floor gave way, they fell to the ground and were buried underneath a ton of burning hay. Other firemen played the hose on the flaming mass while volunteers went to the rescue of the entombed firemen. Holes were burrowed in the hay and the firemen were taken out. They were not burned, but were almost suffocated.

The "kohinoor" of the Wabash river pearls was brought to Evansville by Lew Pearson, a Wabash river mussel digger, who lives in a houseboat near St. Francisville, Ill. It was about the size of a 5-cent piece, and Pearson asked $3,000 for it. He was offered $2,500 for it by several dealers, but refused it. The pearl is without a flaw, and is said to be the finest found in the Wabash river in many years. Pearson found it in a mussel several days ago.

Owing to the scarcity of harvest hands in Gibson County, near Ft. Branch, and in some parts of Spencer County, many farmers are working their wives and daughters in the harvest fields. Women drive binders and also shock the wheat after it is cut in the fields. In Spencer County and some parts of Perry County, many farmers have for years been assisted in the fields by their wives and daughters. The women in that section are strong and brawny and can do as much physical labor as a man.

Guy Table, sent to the Indiana Reformatory at Jeffersonville in September, 1908, to serve one to fourteen years for grand larceny, escaped and rode away on a big bay horse which he took from the Reformatory stables. The horse was recovered at Watson, six miles east, but the rider has vanished for the present. Table was working on a new barn outside the wall, and, with three or four others, was under a guard, whose attention he eluded, then went to the old barn and got away. He is white, aged 28 years, and was dressed in overalls and straw hat.

Jesse Overstreet, former representative in Congress from the Indianapolis district, is getting as brown as the proverbial berry at the Crump cottage on White river, a short distance from Columbus. Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet are spending the summer there and are living close to nature. Colonel John Scheible, who knows more about fish and game than any dozen men in the neighborhood, is the companion of the former Congressman. "I supposed he would have the bighead," said Colonel Scheible after he had told about a big catch of bass made by Mr. Overstreet, "but he is just as common as an old shoe. He don't act like a man who knew Presidents, Senators and all the other big-bugs."

The Sugar Trust

"DAMNABLE methods." That was one of the expressions used before the ways and means committee of the house of representatives in a recent examination. The methods referred to were those of the American Sugar Refining company, commonly called the "sugar trust." The word "damnable" seems justified, too, as one disclosure after another shows the entire lack of principle behind the conduct of affairs.

"The case of the seventeen holes" will be remembered as one of the most glaring frauds ever perpetrated against the United States government. The trust was forced to pay a large amount of money to make good the stealings effected through dishonest methods in weighing. The repayment, however, has not changed in the least the opinions of a single individual about the real character of the action itself. It was just plain thievery, as despicable as could be planned.

The disclosures in the latest affair connected with this same company bring no surprise. After the weighing frauds anything might be considered possible. The Pennsylvania sugar refinery was built in 1903. It was a model plant. It was better than any owned by the trust. The builder, becoming involved, was forced to borrow some money. The one who offered to loan it was an unknown agent of the trust. With the loan he gained the privilege of naming the directors during the period of indebtedness. The rest was easy. Some dummy directors were chosen. They ordered the plant closed. For the comparatively small amount of $1,250,000 the trust had put a dangerous rival out of the way. As for the methods? The old maxim, "All's fair in love and war," probably came to quiet any qualms of conscience if that monitor still spoke to those concerned.

To cap the climax, the suit for $30,000,000 brought by the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining company against the "trust" has been settled out of court for $750,000, the terms of adjustment being uncertain. That makes about $3,000,000 of ill gotten gains surrendered by the "trust" this year as a result of disclosures of its rottenness. The Washington dispatches indicate that the private settlement of this suit has stirred up greater feeling than ever, and that it may lead to the dissolution of this combine. The sooner the blow is struck the better it will be for all, for the average individual who reads of the wickedness of the sugar "trust" will have his belief strengthened that all trusts are corrupt. His sympathy will be more and more with those who attack them because of such disclosures as the ones made about the despicable methods of the American Sugar Refining company.—Chicago Tribune (Rep.)

THE majesty of the law is a strange affair. How wonderful it is anyhow, in Elkhart county it is one thing and in Whitley another. Judge Dodge holds that the option law not only did not go into effect until the governor had followed the constitutional requirements which was in the latter part of November, but he says that the whole law is bad because it does not follow the plain mandates of the constitution. Many good lawyers at the passage of the Moore law pronounced it unconstitutional, in fact, they nearly all contended that it was in direct violation of the principle of uniform application of the statutes. But, the supreme court as well as the lower courts were so completely Hanlyized that they set aside all precedent and upheld the provisions that allowed one part of a community to suspend a law and another to operate under it. Judge Wrigley says that the law is constitutional and that it went into effect on September 23. He is one of three judges in the state who have held that a law can be effective at once without the constitutional requirements of an emergency clause. At least eight judges of like jurisdiction have held that the law is not effective and so you have it. At Columbia City the saloons close by judicial edict and at Goshen they stay open because of judicial sanction. Great is the majesty of the law. In the meantime, the supreme court delays its decision and the men affected must take their medicine.—Ligonier Banner.

Bryant---Baker

The marriage of Miss Madel Mary Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alec Baker, of this city, to Manton Ballou Bryant, of Three Rivers, Mich., was solemnized at 11 a. m., Wednesday, June 30, at Auburn, Ind.

Miss Baker was girlishly lovely in a dainty gown of white French lawn trimmed in valenciennes lace and carried an arm bouquet of bride's roses and smilax. She was attended by the groom's sister, Miss Josephine Bryant, of Auburn, the best man being the bride's brother, Mr. Joe Baker, of Albion, Ind.

The simple marriage ceremony was performed by Father Schmitz at his home on North street, and was witnessed by a number of relatives and intimate friends. After the ceremony the bridal party returned to the bride's home in Butler where an elegant three course breakfast was served. The rooms were made attractive with masses of roses, carnations and ferns, and the decorations at the bride's table were St. Joseph lillies, bridal roses and smilax.

At 4 o'clock p. m., Mr. and Mrs. Bryant departed for Three Rivers, Mich., where they have a cozy home all ready furnished.

The bride is one of Butler's most lovable girls who has a host of friends who will regret to lose her from their midst, the many beautiful presents attesting to her popularity. The groom is a promising young business man of excellent qualities.

The happy couple enjoy the most sincere congratulations of a wide circle of friends.

CURE YOUR KIDNEYS

Do Not Endanger Life When a Butler Citizen Shows You the Cure

Why will people continue to suffer the agonies of kidney complaint, backache, urinary disorders, lameness, headaches, languor, why allow themselves to become chronic invalids when a certain cure is offered them?

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use, because it gives to the kidneys the help they need to perform their work.

If you have any, even one, of the symptoms of kidney diseases, cure yourself now, before diabetes, dropsy or Bright's disease sets in. Read this Butler testimony.

Mrs. A. F. Hand, of Butler, Ind., says: "I was bothered for a long time by kidney complaint and an almost constant pain through the small of my back. The passages of the kidney secretions were very irregular and caused me great annoyance. Doan's Kidney Pills which I procured at Stone's drug store, did more toward relieving me than any other medicine I had ever used and in 1902, I publicly endorsed them. At this time I still hold a good opinion of the remedy as I have used it on several occasions since when having backache and it has never failed to bring me relief."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 26-2

How Horrible

The cirtuit court jury was executed by Judge Bratton on account of the illness of Attorney John W. Baxter.—Garrett Press.

How horrible! We never suspected that Judge Bratton was cruel enough to execute a whole bunch of jurymen, and if this is true he will doubtless be liable to the awful wrath of an outraged community.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

John Gulmyr Lake Shore engineer, recently took the Twentieth Century limited train of nine cars, from Elkkart to Toledo, 133 miles, in 128 minutes. This is the fastest run ever made with this number of cars. Sam Cawley made the run with nine cars in 133 minutes six weeks ago, and Gulmyr had previously made the trip with four cars in 198 minutes, but it had been conceded by railroad men that Cawley's run with nine cars was more remarkable than Gulmyr's run with four cars.

Now that it is decided by the temperance leaders of the county to postpone the county option election from August to December or January, nothing further is being done to obtain the names of petitioners. The Richland township drys will proceed with a remonstrance in an attempt to prevent Charles E. Mercer from establishing a saloon at Corunna. If this is successful there will be no further applications for licenses to contend with until the first of the year. The farmers who were counselled by the dry leaders objected vigorously to an election in August, because of the great amount of farm work on hand at that time. They advised postponement until winter in order they will have plenty of time to take an interest in the fight. As the temperance people deem the farmers very necessary in the election the postponement election was reached.—Garrett Clipper

Where the capital of the nation and the jobs belonged to all the people, where no man or woman had any fear of want and where, if they were disabled, they would be cared for as the government cares for its soldiers who are sick, or wounded, or old, what more could insurance do for them? Where the property of the nation, if burned, the loss would fall on all the people, what use for the insurance? The fear of want drives men to pay $3 for $1 worth of either fire or life insurance. The fifty thousand men who get a living out of insurance would be given other and, as a whole, better paying employment producing things, and the whole world would be better off, for what is not produced cannot be consumed. But before socialism comes, it is likely that state insurance will supercede the grafting system of corporation insurance. It can do it cheaper and safer than any private capital. The national government does not insure its property. It would be silly to do so.—Appeal to Reason.

A dispatch from Angola to the Journal-Gazette has the following to say of one of our well known citizens: The Evangelical meetings which has been in progress at the Christian church tabernacle in this city the past three weeks under the leadership of Dr. Charles Reign Scoville came to a close Sunday evening. Sunday was a great day for the Christian churches of the county, and for the closing effects of the great meeting, and as a result there were probably more people crowded within the walls of the tabernacle than at any other time during the series of meetings The morning service, at which the Lord's supper was served, and a subscription started for money with which to build a new church in this city, lasted until about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, at which time the fund had grown to something over fourteen hundred dollars. The evening services lasted until near midnight, and at this meeting thirty-eight persons added their names to the church rolls, making a grand total of four hundred added during the progress of the meetings. Subscriptions to the church building fund were also taken at this final meeting of the series, and a total of over fifteen hundred dollars announced, as a star for a building fund which it is hoped will be eventually raised to thirty thousand dollars. This great work not only proves the ability of Dr. Scoville as a soul winner and money raiser, but speaks volumes for the unbounded benevolence and generosity of the people of this city and county. Dr. Scoville and wife will go to the farm, near Butler, Ind., for a vacation and much needed rest.

A change will be made in the handling of eggs, and not at a great distance in the future, either. Ray Routsong, 20 years of age, who was sleeping in a livery stable at Goshen, was burned to death Saturday evening after a skyrocket went through an open window in the haymow and started a fire which destroyed the building. Others who slept in the building escaped, and it was not known that Routsong was in the building until firemen stumbled over his charred body.

A wealthy resident of a neighboring state, whose possessions were mostly in land, hit upon a plan to avoid the uncertainties attendant upon the distribution of estates and the litigation due to disappointed heirs. He called in three commissioners in whose judgment he had confidence and instructed them to make a partition of his land among his seven children. These commissioners made what they believed to be an equitable division of the land, after which deeds to the several tracts were placed in seven envelopes and carefully sealed. The envelopes were then shuffled until identification was impossible and an envelope was handed to each heir bearing a deed to the particular tract to which the son or daughter was entitled. The report says the children were all satisfied and thus property valued at more than $80,000 was disposed of, with the old farmer retaining a tract ample to keep him for the rest of his days. The services of the commissioners probably amounted to some $50, and as a means of avoiding expensive litigation and hard feelings they were certainly worth the money.

The editor of the Commercial-Mail has made another great sacrifice for the cause of temperance. He has kicked another $100 into the back yard from the standpoint of principle, according to his own statement. During the local option campaign he spurned at least an opportunity to rake in $100 which. he alleges, a wet booster from Defiance, Ohio, was anxious to give him; but which the wet booster asserts was simply a feeler. Now what are the facts about this recent great sacrifice to principle! The Will H. Ding Advertising Agency, of Chicago, sent advertising propositions to every publisher in Indiana, regardless of his attitude in the local option elections. The proposition calls for 2,000 inches of space in the daily papers and 2,000 inches in the weekly papers, scattered over a period of sixteen months. Plates are to be furnished, and the sample ad sent with the proposition would measure about 85 inches. For this work, the agent offered the munificent sum of 2½ cents per inch in each paper. No local merchant or advertiser is getting advertising in the C. M. at such ridiculously low rates, and if the editor of the down street organ were to receive a proposition to run temperance advertisements at the same rate, they, too, would be promptly turned down, for the reason that he could not afford to accept the advertising at the rates offered, but he would not make the matter public and claim that he turned it down from principle. The whole purpose is to create the impression that he is a martyr to the cause of temperance in order that he may be able to deceive the public and gain some political and business advantage thereby. Newspapers make such "sacrifices" every week by ignoring advertising propositions made on a starvation basis, but they do not parade the matter in their columns and cry that it was done as a sacrifice to principle.—Columbia City Post.

We are informed that more than one hundred cases of beer were shipped into Butler last week besides sixty gallons of whisky. It doesn't seem that putting the saloons out of business has pulverized the rum power to any noticeable extent. Class No. 9 of the U. B. church met Wednesday evening, June 30, with Mr and Mrs. Wm. Whetsel at their home northwest of Butler. The house was beautifully decorated in colors appropriate to the season and the table banked with roses. Ice cream and cake were served, after which the guests departed for their homes, each well repaid for the effort made.

Six years ago we were in the town of Ashley, located on the Wabash railroad east of Wolcottville, says the Milford Mail. At that time it was a promising little city of 1,500 inhabitants and had the Wabash railway shops that employed seven hundred people. Two years ago the railway shops were moved away and now the town is rapidly going to pieces. Brick blocks that were built at a cost of from six to eight thousand dollars can now be purchased for the cost of the material. Trade has left the town and at the rate things are going the postoffice cannot remain long. The town of Hudson lies a mile west of Ashley and the latter place was largely located and built up through spite, thinking to draw from Hudson.

Every year the feeling is growing stronger against the dangerous pastimes of celebrating with fireworks the anniversary of the birthday of the nation. The aftermath of such celebrations every year is appalling, and thousands are yearly crippled or killed because of the practice. There should be many more "safe and sane" ways of showing our joy as a nation than in cultivating the warlike spirit of our youth, and ending the day with suffering and death, besides conflagrations and the "going up in smoke" of many thousands of dollars of wealth caused by the destructive fireworks falling in the wrong places. Manufacturers have devised and put upon the market so many and most beautiful, and comparatively harmless displays, that there seems no call for the "roar and fire" of battle, as well as the smoke and danger hanging about its field.

A remonstrance bearing the signatures of 199 voters against the granting of a license to conduct a saloon in Richland township in this county was filed with County Auditor Shook Friday morning. This is enough to prevent the commissioner from granting a license. At the last general election there were 327 votes cast in the township. The law requires in order to make the remonstrance effective that it must have the signatures of half the number of votes cast at the last election A majority would be 164 Hence the remonstrators have thirty-five more than necessary. Richland township has been dry by remonstrance, but the time limit had expired. Hence the filing of the new remonstrance. Charles E. Mercer had given notice that he would apply at the July 5 session of the commissioners for a license to sell liquors at Corunna, a town in Richland township.

TEN MILLIONS FOR BASEBALL

HOW 30,000,000 AMERICANS SUPPORT AN INDUSTRY WHICH PAYS OUT $8,000,000 ANNUALLY.

FIFTEEN thousand dollars a year for Fielder Jones to manage the White Sox. Twelve thousand dollars a year to Hans Wagner, just a player on the Pittsburg team. These are some of the figures which make the sport-loving public sit up and take notice. How is it possible for the baseball magnates to be able to pay such salaries is a question frequently asked. When it is stated that the fans in this country pay out annually something like $10,000,000 in the major leagues alone to witness baseball games, and that $8,000,000 of this amount goes out again in salaries and other expenses, it is easy to see how it is that baseball managers are able to pay such amounts to their players.

There are a lot of Hans Wagners—big and little—in the baseball business, and any undertaking that can pay such salaries may properly be regarded as having reached that dignity which entitles it to be called an industry. Most of the baseball fans themselves may not know there is such a thing as the baseball industry of the United States, but there is. Nor can it be described without the use of big figures. It is great in income, great in expenditure, great in the number of men employed, and still greater in the number of its patrons.

First, consider the huge volume of attendance. Anything that flourishes in a dry time may safely be presumed to have the seeds of life within it—so what must be said of the tremendous development in attendance that took place last year in the two big leagues—7,069,122, as against 6,136,547 in 1907? Almost every other industry except that of baseball was slowing down, bread lines were forming in the cities, and the workhouses were overrun with hoboes, but not a blade of grass appeared in the roads to the ball grounds.

Are not these figures truly wonderful? A great statesman who can draw 10,000 persons to hear him speak goes back to the privacy of his room at a hotel and swells out his chest until his shirt studs fly out. Yet eighteen baseball human beings and an umpire can draw three times the crowd, make each one pay an admission fee, which the great statesman does not, and send them away happy. The American people surely do like to be entertained.

But the attendance story of the big leagues is only a fraction of the attendance story itself. In this country are fifty minor leagues, scattered all the way from Portland, Ore., to the Florida everglades. Each of these leagues is composed of eight clubs. Each club plays during a season 150 games. If each club could play by itself there would be played in the minor leagues during a season 60,000 games, but as two clubs are required to make a game, there are only 30,000 contests. An attendance of 800 is said to be a fair average at minor league games. If it is, 24,000,000 persons saw baseball played last year at Kalamazoo, Oshkosh, Angel's Camp and other similar places, which brings the total baseball attendance of the country up to 31,000,000.

Now, let us see what these figures mean in money. In New York one cannot roost on the bleachers for less than 50 cents, and if he would get under the roof of the grand stand, where fouls and flies are not so likely to put his eye out, he must pay $1.50. In some of the smaller cities the tariff is not so high; so let us call 50 cents the average price of a seat at a big league game. Based on this figure, the income of the two big leagues last year was more than $3,500,000. And if the 24,000,000 customers of the minor leagues paid an average of 25 cents each, the incomes of these smaller associations aggregated $6,000,000. A game must be pretty good that can pull almost $10,000,000 from the pockets of the American people during a panic year.

"I suppose the American public is now paying in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 for the national game, counting in the minor leagues, enough to buy two tickets for every one of the 21,000,000 men of voting age in the country, and some over," said a well-known baseball magnate. "More than 7,000,000 persons attended the games of the two major leagues last year, the banner year up to date. This makes somewhat more than $3,000,000 paid out by the large cities during a season that lasts about six months. There are about fifty-six minor club leagues of professionals, which together would make about $15,000,000 in receipts. Then there are the semi-professional games, the college games and the 10-cent games in the open places about every city.

"The American Association and the Eastern League have receipts averaging annually upward of $100,000 for each club. Teams from such cities as Buffalo, Providence, Louisville and Kansas City must draw about $80,000 each. The Pacific Coast League, I should say, averages $65,000 for each club, and the Southern League teams $60,000 a year each. The clubs from such places as Albany, New Haven, Utica and Scranton probably average $45,000 to $50,000 in annual receipts, with almost an equal amount to the credit of clubs from Savannah, Galveston, Poughkeepsie and Richmond.

"The number of men engaged in professional baseball makes an astonishing total. There are about fifty-eight club leagues in all, I think—leagues that are entitled to protection of their territory and their contracts by the National Baseball Commission. Say that the average number of clubs in a league is eight. That makes 464 professional clubs. As an average, I suppose there are about eighteen men on the pay roll of each club. That makes 8,352 professional ball players. The semi-professionals are another enormous army.

"The outlay from professional sources for balls and bats must mean nearly $40,000 a season—say about 1,200 bats and as many dozen balls. This is a detail to the outsider, but it counts up.

"The sum tied up in grounds, stands and bleachers is entirely a matter of conjecture. It varies according to the place and arrangements. It has been said that the average value of National League grounds is $250,000 and of American League grounds $200,000.

"This tremendous aggregation of capital is, in some ways, a stake in a big gamble. Baseball is subject to all kinds of changeable conditions. The public is fickle. Box office receipts depend upon the standing of the team to a large extent. Weather may knock a season skyhigh. The stronger teams are not forced out of business by bad weather, but their receipts may be cut down, after the weeks of preliminary training when nothing is coming in.

"In general, however, baseball is a safe proposition. It is bound to grow. From year to year, in the long run, the attendance will increase. It is sure to with larger populations in the cities, better means of transit and baseball education, you might call it, for the public. Extraordinary struggles for supremacy, such as were seen last year, may pile up phenomenal totals out of the line of steady growth, but the progress of the game will catch up with and pass old records."

But, unfortunately for the owners of baseball stock, this sum is not all profit. There are heavy expenses to pay. The labor cost is big, the largest single item in the list. Not every man draws a Hans Wagner salary, but there are so many ball players in the country that in the aggregate they call for a large sum.

The teams in the two big leagues are composed of approximately 560 players. That is figuring on a basis of thirty-five men to a team. Some of these fellows receive fancy salaries, anything from $5,000 up to Hans Wagner's $12,000. But $3,000 a season is said to be a fair average for big league players. If so, the larger associations annually pay $1,680,000 for players. The umpires get something, too, as do the managers of the clubs and the ground employes. Probably it would be safe to say that the big leagues pay out $2,000,000 a year for labor of one kind and another. Any other concern that pays out six and a half millions a year regards itself, and quite properly so, as quite an institution.

Then, there is the baseball crop—it costs something to raise that. Any big league team will bat to pieces or lose each season forty dozen balls. Baseballs cost $15 a dozen. Six hundred dollars a year is what it costs each team to keep the pitcher supplied with ammunition. And it costs approximately $70,000 a year for the 55,630 baseballs that are necessary to provide the American people with their favorite sport. Bats also come high. The big league teams each use about seventy-five bats a season—$1,800 for the sixteen teams. If the 400 smaller concerns each wear out thirty bats they pay $18,000. Yet the best proof that the mortality among baseball bats is high is the fact that one concern has five factories in which such implements are made. In the baseball business uniforms are also desirable, if not necessary. In some of the teams of the minor leagues a pair of short overalls, a belt and an undershirt are apropos, de rigueur and suited to the minute—but not so in the teams of the big leagues. A big leaguer must have at least two uniforms each season. They cost $15 apiece. Gloves are another expensive modern requirement. The baseball glove bill, therefore, amounts to $55,000 a year. Two pairs of specially made shoes are also required for each player. Baseball shoes cost $8 per pair. Probably it would be safe to add $50,000 for catchers' masks, chest protectors, and so on; then we may take up the item of hotel bills. Baseball players have enormous appetites. Many hotel keepers would rather see them stop somewhere else, and nobody will keep them eating and give them a place to sleep for less than $3 a day. Players pay their own board, but it all comes out of the game. There is also traveling to be done, and the total baseball traveling bill is perhaps $534,560.

The foregoing items constitute the main items of receipt and expenditure that are necessary to the conduct of the baseball industry. Some items are left out because they cannot well be put in. The cost of ball grounds is such an item. In the big leagues it is never small. In some cities it is enormous. But here is a recapitulation of the chief items of baseball income and expenditure, the figures in most cases being in round numbers:

RECEIPTS.
Admissions	$10,000,000
EXPENDITURES.
Salaries	$ 6,500,000
Hotel bills	1,342,000
Uniforms	57,000
Gloves	55,000
Shoes	105,000
Catchers' masks, etc.	50,000
Balls	70,000
Bats	20,000
Railroad fare	535,000

Surely here are all the elements of an industry. Any concern that is taking in $10,000,000 a year is no longer in the small potato class. Twenty years ago no one ever dreamed of anything like this. Now those who are feeling the baseball pulse say the fever has just begun. They declare that in another twenty years the attendance at ball games will have become so great that the present army of fans will look small.

SCHOOL CLOSING EXERCISES TURN INTO TRAGEDY.

Five children who took part in the commencement exercises of Mrs. B. C. Boyd's school in Central City, Ky., were severely burned; the audience was changed from an applauding group into a fighting mob and several other children were slightly injured. Panic was averted by the coolness of the men in the audience, who covered the flaming children with their coats. One of the girls was the unwitting cause of the catastrophe. The little girls had formed in a circle and had drilled back and forth in their white muslin dresses, the audience gathering enthusiasm as the entertainment progressed. Then the lights were extinguished and a candle in the hand of each child flashed out brilliantly. The aunts, mothers, fathers and playmates in the crowd cheered and applauded so enthusiastically that one little girl grew frightened and dropped her candle. The flame leaped to the white muslin and in a twinkling five dresses were afire.

SHAVES MAN IN LIONS' CAGE.

Rather than let it be said that the barbers in Chillicothe, Ohio, were lacking nerve, Charles Goodner accepted the challenge issued by Captain Cardona, lion tamer, and in the steel arena gave the captain a shave with a big lion perched on either side. The tent where the feat was performed was jammed with curious people. To slow music, which sounded like a dirge, Goodner entered the cage calmly, lathered and shaved the captain, and then shouted "next." The big African lions which were in the cage looked at the performance with wondering eyes, and had not recovered from their astonishment when the barber bowed his way out.

Mothers fought to reach their children—veritable small bonfires on the platform. The children, gnawed with the pain, made efforts to clamber over the footlights to those to whom they looked for surcease of all pain. Little Louise Marshall, a screaming rocket, leaped over the footlights and into the lap of her aunt in the audience. Men in the audience then smothered the flaming clothing, but this action is believed to have been too late.

Profits to the State from the tobacco monopoly in France amounted last year to $80,000,000, as compared with $2,800,000 in 1811, the first year of the monopoly.

CLEANING THE OLD HULL.

When the Steamer Is Docked for a General Overhauling.

Within the basin a steamer is docking, says a writer in Harper's Weekly. The hydraulic gates are shut, the pumping engines clang, an exhaust pipe on the engine house puffs out clouds of steam. Men rush about waving signals, lowering props against the ship. There come sharp orders from the master of the dock, who stands with folded arms at the edge of the basin. The crew are still on board. They line the rails, chattering and gesticulating; others thrust curious heads through rows of ports.

The water sinks rapidly. The steamer settles on the blocks and soon her battered bottom comes to view. She is an old boat, scarred by seas. The great plates beneath her water line are seamed with rust; the paint has vanished; the iron is eaten into furrows by years of seething water; barnacles sprout about her keels, clustering thickly on one another, here and there heaping into chains of hills, spurs of which run off in all directions and disappear into the shadows beneath her hull; growths of seaweed cling upon her sides, oozing moisture, combed into dark green traceries. At length the dock is empty. Its wooden, steplike walls are dripping and covered with slippery moss. Little rivulets trickle down and run out beneath the ship into broad, dark, slimy pools. Water splashes through leaks in the gates, the air smells dank and marshy and reeks of river mud.

Men scramble down into the basin and attack the steamer. Clad in oilskins, they duck in and out beneath the hull, cleaning, scraping, painting, hosing down the sides. Beneath the stern they gather in a knot about the screw. One blade is missing, the others are twisted and blunted and caked with rust. The blows of a sledge hammer ring out loudly; the men shout at one another as they strive to loosen the propeller from the shaft. One of the owners of the boat—a tall man in a long raincoat that flaps about his ankles—watches them anxiously. His patent leather shoes are flecked with mud.

The foreman hurries about giving directions. "Oh, this ship's all right," he says in answer to your question. "She only wants a bit of washing and a screw. She fouled a buoy down river going on a week ago and left a blade there in the chain so's to remember their meeting. But she needed a new screw bad. The old one was all but done for, as it was, by the ice last winter."

HEROIC MEASURE SAVES LAD.

Nine-months-old Evans Killeen, of New York, swallowed a "jack," one of the little eight-pronged metal toys used by children in playing marbles. The little fellow had snatched the "jack" from one of several children playing in the hallway of the house. He gasped, clawed at his throat and sank into semi-consciousness. His mother happened to come in the door and the other children excitedly told her what had happened. The woman slapped the baby's back violently, but could not dislodge the piece of metal. Her screams attracted a policeman, who summoned a doctor from Bellevue. The surgeon arrived quickly in the new automobile ambulance and decided to operate at once.

But he did not have the tube used in such cases, so he bundled the boy into the machine and told the chauffeur to put on full speed. With the siren sounding for blocks ahead, the car raced along at about fifty miles an hour. At Twentieth street and Second avenue the surgeon saw the boy had hardly a minute to live.

"Stop!" he yelled to the driver.

When the car halted the doctor picked up the baby by the heels, leaned over the back of the ambulance, and for fully a minute swung the boy in a circle, now and then, when the head was toward the street, giving the body a jerk. Suddenly there was a metallic ring on the street.

The "jack" had been dislodged, and the doctor, panting from his exertions, placed the child on the couch again, and once more the chauffeur put on full speed and went whizzing like mad to Twenty-sixth street, rounding the corner into the accident ward with a dizzy skid. The life of the baby was saved by the doctor's remarkable "operation."

SPLINTERS.

It is easier to make a mistake than to repair the break.

It is easier to tell the truth than to explain away a falsehood.

People with very pale nails are subject to infirmity of flesh.

The man who knows everybody else's mind rarely ever knows his own.

Small nails indicate smallness of mind, obstinacy, and conceit.

The dollar that shines is worth no more than the dollar that is dull.

Lovers of knowledge and broad-minded people have round nails.

Red and spotted nails are generally found on the hands of choleric people.

Nails growing into the flesh at the points or sides indicate luxurious tastes.

Many small opportunities are missed in a futile attempt to catch a big one.

The Unconscious Tribute.

When his business had yielded such profits that he began to take life more easily and think of retiring, Mr. Holden endeavored to throw some good things in the way of a younger firm. "How about letting Hobbs & Rawson have your next consignment of canned novelties?" he suggested to one of the manufacturers. "They are hard-working, gentlemanly young fellows."

"That's just the trouble," said the manufacturer, with a decided shake of his head. "I'm no gentleman myself, and I don't propose to mix up nor have any business dealin's with gentlemen.

"I'll consign my goods to you, same as I've always done, and you can do as you like with 'em."

A WORD WITH WOMEN.

These Facts May Open the Eyes of Many Discouraged Ones.

Mrs. Matilda Lindemann, 4423 Wentworth Ave., Chicago, Ill., says:

"From my own experience I believe the worst of women's troubles originate from weak kidneys. For years my health failed gradually. Pain in the back and a feeling of heavy pressure over the abdomen, poor appetite, nervousness and dizzy spells made life a burden. The kidney secretions were terribly disordered. I could hardly move a muscle without severe pain. I was a physical wreck when I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. The change was wonderful. Since using them my trouble is gone. I have a good appetite, weigh more and feel well."

THE REAL SLAVE.

English Actor Says Men, Not Women, Need More Liberty.

"It's all right to talk about woman suffrage," said William Hawtrey, a noted English actor, "but what I think we all need is more liberty for men.

"Women have a lot more real liberty than men. Take the question of hats, for instance. Get a crowd of men together and shout 'Hats off,' and every one of us gets bareheaded in the shortest possible time. Could you do it with women? Not in a million years. Why, they had to pass laws before they could get women to take off their hats in the theaters.

"Suppose a man came home at night and told his wife that he'd bought a new blue hat that was a perfect dream. Would she be interested in the hat? Not at all. A new hat. The idea; why, he had a perfectly good derby that he wore last fall. What possible use could he have for two hats? His mind must be affected.

"Just suppose, I say suppose, for of course no man would have the courage to do it, but just for the sake of argument let us suppose that a fellow did tell his wife that he thought her last season's hat was good enough for this season. Can you imagine what his life would be for the rest of the summer?

"No, sir; what is really needed is more freedom for men."

He Was Fortified.

Professor Masson of Edinburgh, author of a compendious life of Milton, was once exasperated by the listlessness of a student in one of his classes. After hearing long in silence the young man's inattention, the professor one day broke off in the midst of his lecture and addressed himself to the student.

"May I ask you, sir," said he, "whether you expect to pass this course?"

"I have hopes, sir," answered the student.

"Then when the examination comes, sir, you will wish for notes on these lectures. What will you do for them?"

"I have my father's, sir," was the reply.—Bellman.

AN OLD TIMER

Has Had Experiences.

A woman who has used Postum since it came upon the market knows from experience the wisdom of using Postum in place of coffee if one values health and a clear brain. She says:

"At the time Postum was first put on the market I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia, and my physician had repeatedly told me not to use tea or coffee. Finally I decided to take his advice and try Postum. I got a package and had it carefully prepared, finding it delicious to the taste. So I continued its use and very soon its beneficial effects convinced me of its value, for I got well of my nervousness and dyspepsia.

"My husband had been drinking coffee all his life until it had affected his nerves terribly, and I persuaded him to shift to Postum. It was easy to get him to make the change, for the Postum is so delicious. It certainly worked wonders for him.

"We soon learned that Postum does not exhilarate or depress and does not stimulate, but steadily and honestly strengthens the nerves and the stomach.

"To make a long story short, our entire family continued to use Postum with satisfying results, as shown in our fine condition of health, and we have noticed a rather unexpected improvement in brain and nerve power."

Increased brain and nerve power always follows the use of Postum in place of coffee, sometimes in a very marked manner. "There's a Reason."

"The President has, I see, just named a new Governor of Alaska, some Washington newspaper man," said T. F. Barnes, of Seattle.

"I don't know the new Governor and I wish him well, but I'd make a bet that he will rue the day he ever accepted the job. There's trouble coming to him in gobs. No man has ever held that particular office who hasn't, for the better part of his incumbency, wished he were in purgatory, for a change. The best man that ever lived, holding that commission, will get in hot water from the time he lands, and will be accused of every crime from horse stealing to infanticide. It was so with Governors Brady and Hoggatt, and their successors will fare no differently. Hoggatt, who has just resigned, was straight as a string and plucky as a bulldog, but he grew weary of the eternal hammering and was glad to get out. If I had a deep grudge against a man I'd want to see him made Governor of Alaska."

Itched and Burned Terribly—Could Not Move Thumbs Without Flesh Cracking—Sleep Impossible—Cuticura Soon Cured Eczema.

"An itching humor covered both my hands and got up over my wrists and even up to the elbows. The itching and burning were terrible. My hands got all scaly and when I scratched, the surface would be covered with blisters and then get raw. The eczema got so bad that I could not move my thumbs without deep cracks appearing. I went to my doctor, but his medicine could only stop the itching. At night I suffered so fearfully that I could not sleep. I could not bear to touch my hands with water. This went on for three months and I was fairly worn out. At last I got the Cuticura Remedies and in a month I was cured. Walter H. Cox, 16 Somerset st., Boston, Mass., Sept. 25, 1908."

When You Visit New York, Put Up at the Hotel Empire.

In everything that constitutes a satisfactory hotel, the Empire, at Broadway and Sixty-third street, is abundantly endowed. The man of business, the woman on her shopping expedition, the family coming to town to attend social functions, the tourist on sight-seeing bent, if they make their headquarters at The Empire, will each be in the center of that which interests them, for the reason that The Empire, by Subway, Elevated Railroad and Surface cars, is in close touch with the center of social, business, amusement and shopping centers. The house itself is delightfully appointed. There is nothing in up-to-date hotel equipment lacking at The Empire. The rooms are large, well and comfortably furnished and all have an abundance of air and sunshine. The management keeps constantly in mind the greatest possible comfort for the traveler at the smallest cost, consistent with such service. The policy of the restaurant is such as to meet with the approval of all classes; for instance, a delightful breakfast is served in the pretty Ladies' Restaurant at any price from thirty to eighty cents each; a Matinee Luncheon is served for fifty cents and a table d'hote Dinner from 5:30 to 8:30, at one dollar. There is an orchestra which dispenses exquisite music during Luncheon, Dinner and After Theater Supper. Besides the above table d'hote meals, there is an a la carte restaurant which has become noted for its excellent cooking, efficient service and moderate charges. The Gentlemen's Cafe is one of the best appointed rooms of its kind on Broadway; a special bill of fare for business men is provided in this room between the hours of 11 and 3 o'clock daily. Here congregates every one of note in the Automobile world, The Empire being in the center of "Automobile Row." Central Park is only one block away. The principal restaurants, noted clubs, great theaters and famous shops are all within five or six minutes' walk, while the Subway and Elevated Stations are within one minute's walk of the hotel. The Empire continues, as it has since its opening, under the management of Mr. W. Johnson Quinn.

The Lunatic's Thought.

The chaplain of a large private asylum in Yorkshire, Eng., recently asked a brother clergyman to preach to the inmates on a Sunday morning during his absence. He said to him: "Preach them a good sermon for though insane on some points they are very intelligent." The preacher talked to them of Africa and India and of heathen mothers who threw their babes into the sacred River Ganges as offerings to the gods. Tears streamed down the face of one listener. When asked by the clergyman afterward what part of the sermon had affected him, the lunatic replied: "Sir, I was thinking it was a pity your mother didn't throw you into the Ganges."

Smiles of The Day

Tells the Telephone Girls the Truth.

Two telephone girls were talking over the wire one afternoon. The subject of the conversation was a lawn party, which was to take place the next day. Both were discussing what they should wear, and after five minutes had come to no decision.

In the midst of this important conversation a masculine voice interrupted, asking humbly what number he had. The lack of reply did not squelch the inquirer, for he asked again for the number.

One of the girls became indignant and scornfully asked:

"What line do you think you are on, anyhow?"

"Well," said the man, "I am not sure, but judging from what I have heard I should say I was on a clothes line."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Couldn't Remember Dates.

"Don't you remember how when I had dat big bag of dates I gave you some, Jimmy?"

"I'm awfully sorry, Hank, but I never did have no memory for dates."

The Burning Question.

A Baltimore teacher was trying to explain the meaning of the word "recuperate."

"Charley," she said, "when night comes your father returns home tired and worn out, doesn't he?"

"Yes, ma'am," assented Charley.

"Then," continued the teacher, "it being night, and he being tired, what does he do?"

"That's what ma wants to know," said Charley.—Success Magazine.

The Devout Butcher.

A butcher of a certain village, being a devout Christian, whenever he sent a business note invariably accompanied it with a text.

A certain lady, wishing him to kill some of her pigs, sent him a letter to notify him of the fact, to which he sent the following reply:

"I don't think so," replied the Chicago woman; "I've been married six times in other months, and only twice in June."—Yonkers Statesman.

Painless Shaving.

Money Talks.

In an Ohio town there is still maintained a stage coach system of transportation, the steeds whereof are of sad appearance.

One day a Cincinnati man visiting the town in question boarded a stage, having no other currency than a $5 bill. This he proffered to the driver. The latter took it, looked it over for a moment or so, and then asked:

"Which horse do you want, Bill?"—Harper's Weekly.

Disposing of It Cheaply.

Client—This copy of my will is all right, but I want the original written on a slate.

"I acquired the art of concealing my ignorance," answered the wise M. D.

Summer Pirates.

"Yes," laughed the tall chap, "this is the picture of the country boarding house where they charged us $20 a week for two meals a day. It has a fine marine title."

"Marine title?" asked his friend in surprise. "What is there marine about it?"

"Why, I call it 'Boarded by Pirates.'"

Searching for It.

"Yes," said the young man at the piano, "there is a lot of music in this box."

"If there is," suggested the long-suffering friend, "you should hire some one to get it out."

Satisfied.

The professor steps into the barber's chair and assumes an attitude of deep meditation.

"Hair cut, sir?"

"Please!" The barber cuts the hair.

"Like a shampoo?"

"Um—please!" He gets the shampoo.

"Shave you, sir?"

"Um—yes!" One shave.

"Massage?" He nods assent and consequently is massaged. The barber removes the towel, the professor arises and mechanically takes the proffered check.

"What's this?"

"Your check, sir."

"My check?"

"Certainly, sir. Hair cut, shampoo, shave and massage."

The professor rubs his hand over face and head. "Did I get all that?"

"Surely, sir."

"It's queer, very queer—most extraordinarily queer! A most wonderful example of philosophical phenomena!"

"What's queer, sir?" asks the barber in dismay.

The professor draws a small oblong black box from inside his pocket.

"Why, the working of the human mind. What I came in for was to get my razor honed."

Woman's Gentle Art.

"I often wonder," said a gentleman to a young mechanic, "how you ever plucked up enough courage to propose to your wife—you were always such a bashful young fellow."

"Well," explained the husband, "she made it easy for me. You know I walked out with her frequently, and she must have known I meant business. But I was always afraid to speak right out till one night I said to her rather carelessly, 'Do you think you'll ever marry?' She said she thought she might; so I said 'When?' 'Whenever you do,' was her answer; and I said, 'All right.' So we settled the day there and then."—Tit-Bits.

Why He Lost Out.

Jack—I called on Miss Gotrox a few times last winter, and tried to make love to her, but failed.

Tom—Wouldn't she stand for it?

Jack—Oh, she seemed to be willing enough, but no man can make love to a woman successfully when there is a cuckoo clock in the parlor.

Mrs. Dorcas—How can we, my dear? We can't afford to pay one more than $1,500 a year.—Judge.

Put Into Practice.

Poor Pattison went into the chemist's shop for some plaster for his head. "I've always tried to bring up my children to think before they speak," he said, with a sigh, "but I am convinced it is a wrong principle."

"Surely not, sir," answered the chemist, sympathetically.

"Yes, sir," Pattison replied. "I've told my children always to count ten before they say anything. This morning I went out for a walk with my eldest boy. We were walking near some partially built houses when Tom called out, 'Oh, father'——

"'Now, steady, my boy,' I said, seeing he was excited; 'count ten.'"

"Did he obey you?"

"Yes, worse luck, he did, but before he had got to five the brick he had seen falling hit me on the head. Thank you. How much?"—London Mail.

Respect for Ladies.

Bacon—A woman who wants to vote is called a suffragette, is she not?

Egbert—Well, yes, that's what she's called if there are ladies present.—Yonkers Statesman.

FARM NOTES

Cultivation of Corn.

When corn is planted after the first week in June the land needs more attention than when prepared earlier. If plowed early the weeds will have made an appearance, which is an advantage, as they can be destroyed before the corn is planted; but the late corn will be more easily injured by drought than that which has made an earlier start. The crop should be cultivated after every rain, so as to prevent loss of moisture. Another point is to thin out the plants if they are too thick. It would be difficult to induce many farmers to "thin out" their corn, as they would claim that the land, having been manured, was capable of providing for as many stalks in the hills as made their appearance; it is not a matter of plant food with late corn, however, but moisture. When too many stalks are close together there is a struggle for existence; some become weeds to the others, and in the end only the most vigorous make growth, and yield grain up to the average. It is, therefore, better to remove every stalk that shows lack of growth, and if the heroic remedy of reducing the stalks to two in a hill could be tried on a plot by way of experiment, the result would be satisfactory, as well as convince farmers that there is nothing gained by endeavoring to grow three or four plants in a space which only two should occupy. If rainfall continues to be abundant, as has been the case for June, there will be no necessity for reducing the number of plants.

Cause of Bitter Milk.

Recent experiments on the Ontario Experiment Farm show that the yeast-like micro-organism of bitter torula is the cause of much bitter milk and cheese. Factories in that section have complained of the bitterness of the milk, and as a consequence the experiment station has conducted extensive investigations as to the cause. Cultures of the torula were added to milk and cheese that had been sterilized, and in each case a bitter taste was the result. It was not found in milk drawn into sterilized dishes, but was found regularly in mixed milk, in the solutions used for can washes, and also on the leaves of trees under which the cans were habitually kept. The remedies are to cool the milk promptly and to guard it from infection of nay kind. All cans and other utensils should be carefully washed and sterilized by heat. The Connecticut experiment station discovered several years ago that a species of bacteria was the cause of bitter milk and cream. This can be rendered harmless by sterilization.

Crossing a Barbed Wire Fence.

Two stout boards are nailed together, as shown in Fig. 1, and may be used for crossing a barbed wire fence. They should be 10 or 12 inches wide and 2 feet longer than the fence is high to give the desired spread. Firmly nail four cleats on each board and fasten a short board between the two to assist in getting over the fence.

INVERTED V STILE.

STEPS TO GO OVER THE FENCE.

Another device somewhat more elaborate is a double set of steps, shown in Fig. 2. Women and children will have no difficulty in using this, but might find it inconvenient to get over the narrow board.—Farm and Home.

Many Courses in Agriculture.

A total of eighty-seven different courses of study in the long and middle courses in agriculture at the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin is shown in the new catalogue of the university just issued. These do not include the work in the nine other special departments, such as home economics, the short course, three dairy courses, the farmers' course, farmers' institutes, homemaking course, and experimental station work. These eighty-seven courses include thirteen each in soils and agricultural chemistry, twelve each in animal husbandry and horticulture, eleven in dairy husbandry, eight in agricultural engineering, seven in bacteriology, five each in agricultural economics and agronomy, and one in agricultural journalism.

Mottled Butter.

Streaky or mottled butter may be caused by the salt, or it may be due to the working of the butter. The salt is so evenly diffused in the finest kind of butter that, as is shown by a microscope, every grain is surrounded by a film of clear and transparent brine, which points out the necessity of avoiding the overworking of the butter before the salt is added. In the first working every particle of milk should be gotten rid of, but enough clear water should be left to dissolve every grain of salt in twelve hours before the next working. If this be done there will be but little danger of streakiness in the butter, but to get the best results the salt should be very finely ground.

Have Scales at Home.

The weights and measures law has gone into effect. After this, if you buy anything, expecting to get so much, you are entitled to get it or the manufacturer or producer can be fined for the short weights. If the weight is below what the package says, the only way it can be legally sold is for the dealer to tell you the weight. This will hit all short-weight packages and "commercial weights" of every nature.

Everyone should have scales at home. The man who handles much grain or stock should have five-ton scales. He is quite apt to secure better weights from some stock buyers if they know he has scales at home. To know what the stock that is being full fed is doing is also one of the great advantages of having scales on the farm. Small scales in the house will also help to enforce the law of weights and measures. Flour, meal, sugar, in fact, everything, must "weigh out" or the one responsible for the short weight is liable to a fine. See that the law is enforced, now we have it.—Farmers' Breeze.

Buttermilk for Sheep Ticks.

It is claimed that by pouring buttermilk freely along the backs of sheep it will prove a remedy for ticks. If a gill of kerosene is added to a gallon of buttermilk the remedy will be improved, as the kerosene forms an emulsion with buttermilk and does no harm to the animal. The remedy will cost but little and should be given a trial by way of experiment. It is also claimed that if buttermilk is given a horse it will serve better than any other remedy for bots. These remedies were suggested by parties who have tested them.

Damps in Wells.

Before going down into a well test the purity of the air by lowering a lighted candle or lantern. If the light burns dimly, or goes out, the poisonous carbonic acid gas "damps" can be driven out by igniting a quantity of turpentine and sawdust or kerosene and rags in a kettle, and lowering it to the surface of the water, and then later pour several bucketfulls of water into the well from the top. Test again with the lantern, and note the improvement.

Diseases of Mexican Sheep.

For several years past the sheepmen of the Southwest have suffered serious losses from a disease known among the Mexican herders as "pingue." "Pingue" is popularly supposed to be caused by eating either the leaves or roots of a plant which has in the last few years been quite prominent in the public eye as the rubber plant or rubber weed. Hot water and salt is an efficacious remedy.

Value of the Bumble Bee.

The bumble bee is a friend of the farmer. In sections where clover seed crops are depended upon, the value of the bumble bee as an agent in fertilizing the clover blooms is fully appreciated. A knowledge should be had of the useful as well as the destructive insects, which would prove that the farmer has quite as many good insect friends as he has destructive ones.

Coating for Hams.

"Mrashin" is the name of a substance that is used in Bohemia to coat hams. It is as pliable as rubber, tasteless and harmless, and keeps the hams—also meats, eggs, etc.—perfectly fresh almost indefinitely. The mrashin can be peeled from the ham almost as easily as the skin from a banana.

To Pack Butter.

Make a brine of two pounds of salt to two gallons of cold water. Wrap each roll of butter in a cloth; pack in jar until full; pour over the butter the brine made as directed, put an inverted plate, or saucer, with weight on top, to keep butter under the brine.

Annual Celebration

Our annual celebration, on the 4th of July, coming as it did, on Sunday, which could not be made a legal holiday seemed to be a little unsettled as to the proper time to put in its appearance, until the ladies of the Aid Society of the M. E. church, whose birthdays come in the months of June and July, took the matter in hand by celebrating the birthday of our great nation, together with their own, on Friday, July 2, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Blair on Broadway.

By noon of that day the spacious grounds were ablaze with flags and bunting. Booths were erected everywhere in the old time Fourth of July fashion and seats were prepared for the guests all through the grounds.

In one of these booths Mrs. Dr. Berkey and Mrs. Norigan dispensed ice cream and salted wafers to the guests, and near by Mrs. Will Mutzfeld manipulated the gramaphone and served good old fashioned gingerbread. Mesdames Norford and Wilson advertised red lemonade, ice cold to the thirsty and, nearby another counter was piled high with little paper bags filled with pop corn for the little ones and all who came. Then came the fortune teller's booth, Mrs. Decker, representing Madame Serena, a noted fortune teller from France. Mrs. Decker conducted the business in such a clever way that it created much merriment among the young people.

Mrs. F. L. Kiplinger was chairman of the occasion and the exercises commenced with the singing of "America" by the entire audience, Mrs. Creager leading and Mrs. Stage accompanying with the cornet. Miss Helen Garber then gave a parody on "Barbara Frietchie," done in the German dialect, after which the Goddess of Liberty was unveiled. It was remarked by many that the Goddess bore a striking resemblance to Miss Ethel Nimmons.

Mrs. Creager then sang the "Star Spangled Banner" in a most beautiful style after which a medley of national airs was given by the Misses Kenan and the Misses Brink on four violins which called out a prodigious encore. These young ladies are artists in their way and Butler should be proud of them. A unanimous vote of thanks was extended to these ladies and also to Mrs. Stage for the fine music given on that occasion.

Then came "The Countries Future Hope" in the shape of a long procession of baby carriages, with their occupants, decorated in the national colors which ended the program

Mr Blair came forward and made a few remarks expressing his pleasure at seeing so many present and a hope that there might be many happy returns to the same spot, assuring them of a warm welcome.

ECHOES OF THE FOURTH

Four Young Men Arrested for Riotous Conduct

And Three Plead Guilty to the Charge and Pay Their Fines While One Stands Trial and is Acquitted

Friday of last week echoes of the Fourth of July gave evidence of a tempestous time, and things were doing that stirred to anger some of our foremost citizens.

On the night of July 3, the boys celebrated the anniversary of our nation's birthday by what they termed an appropriate and befitting program, but Marshal Lowe took serious exceptions to the manner of the occasion, and after warning them to desist and being met with contemptuous rebuffs, proceeded to swear out warrants for the arrest of several prominent young men.

Roy Oberlin, Roy Apt and Harmon Parker were brought before Mayor Webster on Friday and each plead guilty to the charge of riotous conduct and paid fines. The fine and costs in each case amounted to $11.

A warrant was also issued for Arthur Mutzfeld, but he asserted his innocence and stood trial. The case was called before Mayor Webster on Friday afternoon in the city hall. The room was packed to suffocation; the atmosphere was close and muggy, and the witnesses perspired rather copiously. Attorney E. B. Dunten defended Mutzfeld. Deputy Prosecutor F. A. Brink acted in behalf of the city. The trial was a long drawn out affair, but the mayor was quick in his judgment, deciding in favor of the defendant. There was no evidence to show the young man's guilt.

It seems that when young Mutzfeld was arrested some very hot words passed between the marshal and the Mutzfelds. It is claimed by them that Marshal Lowe called Wm. Mutzfeld a liar, and a warrant was sworn out and Mr. Lowe was arrested on that charge.

The case was heard by Justice of the Peace Fred D. Webster in the city hall, Friday night before a jury of twelve men. Marshal Lowe and Mr. Mutzfeld both acted as their own attorneys. The case was interesting from many standpoints. The jury disagreed, ten standing for conviction and two for acquittal.

This ended the excitement, and everything is now quiet on the Potomac.

Freshley at 2:30 Sunday. He was 80 years, 5 months and 8 days old. He leaves two sons, three daughters and fourteen grandchildren besides a host of friends to mourn his departure, his companion having died in September, 1902.

Mrs. Austin Countryman has been seriously ill lately, but we are pleased to report that she is much better according to the latest news of the case.

Lately the family of David Blaker erected a very nice monument in Big Run cemetery to the memory of their parents who resided many years in Stafford township.

Although it is mid harvest time arrangements have been made for a picnic in Wartenbee's grove next Saturday the 17th inst. We hear that it is for the benefit of the Christian church of Newville. The grove is close to the St. Joe river and is a beautiful spot in which to spend a day for pleasure and rest.

Frank Good, who for many years resided in this locality and who now lives on his farm just north of Hicksville, is reported very sick.

Samuel Hollinger, who was in poor health last winter, seems to be much better now as he was recently seen in a hay field pitching hay. His many friends wish he may enjoy good health for many years to come.

Jacob Hart, of Newville, lately helped Joseph Wilson make hay a few days.

The storm Monday caught some hay out in the fields, and although rain was needed the wind blew down some wheat, oats and corn doing some damage in this way in many places.

Last week much of the early wheat was put in shock. Much fine hay was also secured. With fine weather this week the wheat and grass still standing will nearly all be secured.

Will Craun reports a fine crop of early potatoes which he is now putting on the market.

As a consequence of recent trouble about 4th of July explosives some people think Indiana should have a law requiring those who sell explosives to give a bond of $1,000 or $2,000 as security for damage that may be done by their use. It is said that Ohio has such a law now.

Kills Babe at Breast.

After preparing herself for bed, Mrs. Bump, wife of Ralph Bump, a farmer residing four miles southeast of Roanoke, Ind., deliberately fed the babe at her breast three morphine tablets and then, laying it in its crib to die, drank a half ounce of carbolic acid and called her husband to tell him what she had done in a fit of momentary insanity. The child, four months of age, died and the mother is hovering between death and recovery, more nearly dead than alive, and with the awful charge of infanticide hovering over her. Repeatedly she continues to vow her desire that her effort at willful self-destruction will yet be successful, although admitting that, if she had not killed her infant, she might wish to be well again.

Elks' Train Mixed in Wreck.

Three trainmen killed and one fatally injured and traffic tied up for more than twelve hours are the results of a head-on collision that occurred near Cisco, Utah, between section five of west-bound Denver & Rio Grande passenger train No. 3 and an east-bound sheep train. TARIFF BILL IS PASSED BY VOTE OF 45 TO 34

Ten Republicans, Firm for Downward Revision, Oppose Measure —One Democrat Supports It.

TRIUMPH OF SENATOR ALDRICH

Conferees from Senate Appointed at Once, Without Waiting for House Action.

By a vote of 45 to 34 the tariff bill was passed by the Senate a few minutes after 11 o'clock Thursday night under dramatic circumstances.

Ten Republican Senators defying a last attempt of Aldrich of Rhode Island to read them out of the party, cast their votes against the passage of the measure. Here are the ten:

Beveridge, Ind. Crawford, S. D.
Bristow, Kansas. Cummins, Iowa.
Brown, Nebraska. Dolliver, Iowa.
Burkett, Nebraska. La Follette, Wis.
Clapp, Minnesota. Nelson, Minnesota.

Immediately after the passage of the bill, on motion of Senator Aldrich—contrary to precedents, but sustained by the Vice President, who was in the chair—the conferees on the part of the Senate who will deal with the measure in its next stage were appointed. The usual custom is to wait for the House in which a measure originates to reject amendments made by the other house and ask for a conference. The Senate conferees are:

Republicans.

Aldrich, R. I. Penrose, Pa.
Hale, Maine. Cullom, Illinois.
Burrows, Mich.

Democrats.

Daniel, Virginia. Bailey, Texas.
Money, Mississippi.

Senator Cullom, while named on the committee, may not serve during a great part of the deliberations. He leaves for Atlantic City with Mrs. Cullom and has set no specific time for his return to the capital. His consent at the last moment to have his name included in the committee membership, although inclined by the condition of his health to step aside, solves a problem that otherwise would have given New England, already more than adequately represented, another member on the committee in the person of Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, whose seniority would have demanded consideration and prevented under the circumstances, the appointment of Senator Smoot of Utah.

The vote in detail on the bill was as follows, Senator McEnery of Louisiana being the only Democrat to vote for its passage:

Yeas.

Aldrich, Borah, Bourne, Bradley, Brandegee, Briggs, Bulkeley, Burnham, Burrows, Burton, Carter, Clark (Wyo.), Crane, Depew, Dick, Dixon, Du Pont, Elkins, Flint, Frye, Gallinger, Gamble, Guggenheim, Hale, Heyburn, Johnson, Jones, Kean, Lorimer, McCumber, McEnery, Nixon, Oliver, Page, Penrose, Perkins, Piles, Scott, Smith (Mich.), Smoot, Stephenson, Sutherland, Warter, Wetmore.

Nays.

Bacon, Bailey, Bankhead, Beveridge, Bristow, Brown, Burkett, Chamberlain, Clapp, Crawford, Culberson, Cummins, Daniel, Dolliver, Fletcher, Foster, Frazier, Gore, Hughes, Johnston, La Follette, McLaurin, Martin, Money, Nelson, Newlands, Overman, Owen, Shively, Simmons, Smith (S. C.), Stone, Taliaferro, Taylor.

President Will Visit Many Western Cities, but Not Alaska.

TEACHERS SHUN BOOK FIGHT.

Refuse to Elect Man Committed to Contest for Price Reform.

The election of James Yadkin Joyner, superintendent of public instruction of North Carolina, as president of the National Educational Association in Denver, is regarded by his supporters as a victory in their fight against any regulation of the prices of school text-books. Mr. Joyner was elected over Ben Blewett, head of the St. Louis schools, and Dr. J. H. Phillips of Birmingham, Ala.

The association went on record against the existence of fraternities in high schools in a resolution which declares such organizations to be opposed to the spirit of democracy. It also decided to "investigate" the feasibility of simplified spelling, but took no decided stand either for or against it.

Irwin Shepherd of Winona, Minn., was re-elected secretary, A. H. Chamberlain of California was re-elected treasurer, and Lorenzo D. Harvey, the retiring president, was elected first vice president. San Francisco was selected as the next meeting place of the National Education Association. Milwaukee and Boston contended for it.

STORY OF GINGLES GIRL.

Irish Lacemaker Tells That She Was Beaten in a Chicago Hotel.

A queer story of an alleged plot by two women and a man violently to force her into white slavery was told on the witness stand by Ella Gingles, young Irish lacemaker, on trial in Chicago on a charge of having stolen valuable laces from Miss Agnes Barrette. The girl detailed the events she alleged preceded her discovery by the police, drugged, gagged and tied to a bathtub in the Wellington Hotel last January. The witness three times was overcome. The girl's testimony was given as proof of her earlier charge that she was a victim of a bold plot, in which Miss Agnes Barrette and Mrs. Cecilia Kenyon, the latter now dead, conspired to make it appear that she was a thief.

On the evening of Jan. 4 last, she testified, Miss Barrette asked her to come to the latter's room in the Wellington Hotel, with the understanding she would be paid money due her. Instead, the girl declared, the woman, assisted by Miss Kenyon, locked her in a room. The women, she said, removed her clothing. Then, she testified, they choked and beat her repeatedly. The girl recited her struggles to escape from the torture she alleged was inflicted upon her by the two women and a man, who later came, and how she finally was released at midnight half clad after her money had been taken from her.

FLOOD IN MIDDLE WEST; SANTA FE TRAIN UPSET

Coaches in Eighteen Feet of Water at Pomona, Kansas—Chicago Child Drowns.

300 ARE RESCUED IN BOATS

Unprecedented Rains Swell River and Do Great Damage in Missouri Valley.

Weakened by excessive rains and covered with water to a depth of two feet, the road of the Santa Fe line, one-half mile east of Pomona, Kan., gave way under the weight of the second section of west-bound passenger train No. 5 at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Three coaches turned turtle on the right of the embankment and now lie in eighteen feet of water. The 4-year-old daughter of Mrs. Carrie Rose of Chicago was drowned. Two of the 300 passengers on the train were injured.

Coaches Toppled Over.

The train had been detoured from the main line to the Emporia cut-off to avoid a flood blockade and encountered rising water a mile from Pomona. A stop was made to examine the track and the train slowly entered the flood. Half the distance to the depot had been traversed when the baggage car left the rails. The smoking car and the day coach followed, turned from the rails and slipped gradually over the embankment and down into eighteen feet of water that filled the slough at the side of the roadbed. The turn was made so slowly, however, that the passengers, previously warned of the dangers of the track, succeeded in gaining the tops of the coaches that still stood upright in the flood.

A relief train from Ottawa came in sight through the rising waters at 5 o'clock, but was compelled to return for additional boats and coils of rope to steady the boats against the swift current. Four boats, manned by expert crews, took the passengers off. Homes were found for all the refugees at the farm houses and in the village of Pomona.

Boat Is Swept Away.

One of the first of three boats to reach the spot was caught in the wreckage and lost. The rescue train on its second trip plowed through two feet of water for three-quarters of a mile before it reached the point from which the boats were launched.

In Pattonsburg, Mo., the dead are George Palmer, a harness-maker, and Harrison Walker, a section man, and D. Bower and wife, E. C. Nelson, a grocery clerk and a man named Scott are missing. During the morning a call for aid was sent out from Pattonsburg, a town of 1,000 in Daviess County, which was reported under seven to ten feet of water, and relief trains were made up at St. Joseph and Kansas City.

A dispatch from Santa Rosa, Mo., stated that the St. Joseph relief train was marooned between that place and Pattonsburg. Teh water had gone up until it was two feet over the track. Two Kansas City boats which started from Pattonsburg to the train are missing. But one St. Joseph boat got through. The engine whistled all night to guide the boatmen.

The worst flood of the year is raging in the Des Moines River Valley. The river has reached the fourteen foot mark and threatens to go higher. Thousands of dollars' worth of corn has been swept away. Residences in the southern part of the city of Des Moines were surrounded by a foot of water. Every railroad running trains into Des Moines is hours late.

BRIDE AND GROOM DIE.

Identity of Couple Drowned at South Bend Is Revealed.

Death in a suicide compact in the river at South Bend, Ind., ended a two-day honeymoon and terminated the romance of Herman Lindemann and his bride, formerly Eleanor Zister, both of Chicago. The two were married Saturday at St. Joseph, Mich., by a justice. They rode to death in the St. Joseph river over the dam at South Bend. Those who saw the boat go over the rapids declare the two must have died in a suicide compact. As the boat shot over the dam Lindemann arose in the bow of the frail rowboat, smiling at the horror-stricken crowd which shouted a warning from the shore, puffed twice on a cigarette, and then, as the boat went over the dam, clasped his bride in his arms and sank from sight. Discovery of the young man's identity came when search was made at the Crescent Hotel, where Lindemann and his bride had registered Monday. Chicago addresses of the two were found in clothing left in their rooms.

A GORGEOUS SPECTACLE.

Epochmaking Events Recalled by Lake Champlain Tercentenary.

One of the most remarkable celebrations in the history of the country was that held in northern New York, where the tercentenary of the discovery of Lake Champlain by Samuel De Champlain, the French explorer, was fittingly observed. The Dominion of Canada was represented by several high officials; the United States by President Taft; New York by Gov. Hughes, Vermont by Gov. Prouty and France and Great Britain by their ambassadors, M. Jusserand and Hon. James Brice. The fete commenced at Burlington, Vt., with special religious observance.

The celebration proper began at Crown Point, Monday. There are located forts and redoubts which loomed large in the history of the French and Indian war and the American revolution. During the week at various points about Lake Champlain there were scheduled 23 pageants or tableaux, 9 representing the history of the Iroquois confederacy down to the arrival of the French in this section of the country and 15 illustrating the religious ceremonies and social customs of the Iroquois and the Algonquins in war and peace. The most interesting and gorgeous of the pageants were the two depicting the discovery of the lake by Champlain and the battle between the Huron-Algonquin allies and the fighting Iroquois in which the explorer had a hand. Canadian and American Indians, descendants of the warriors who fought with and against the great French explorer, took part in these tableaux.

Great interest attached to Fort Ticonderoga, which was captured during the revolution by Col. Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain boys. The fort is being reconstructed at a cost of $500,000 by Mrs. Stephen H. P. Pell, daughter of Colonel Robert M. Thompson, of New York, who is so deeply interested in the patriotic history of the section that he is giving the money for the reconstruction of the fort. The west barracks were completed in time for the celebration.

Plattsburg's day was celebrated Wednesday. Near this city Benedict Arnold fought and lost the first naval action of the revolution. His flagship, the Royal Savage, has been lying where she sank in that fight for 133 years. The barge Revenge, one of Arnold's fleet, had been raised and was in the pageant. On Thursday the center of attraction was at Burlington, Vt., where many delightful historical pageants were enacted.

HAS TEN OR MORE WIVES.

John Madson Alleged to Have Duped Twenty-four Women.

John Madson, wanted for bigamy in nearly every large city in the United States and many of the smaller ones, is in the hands of the police of San Francisco. The authorities already have established that he married ten women and either was engaged or married to fourteen others. Each of the twenty-four women duped by Madson is said by the police to have lost money through his friendship. Nine of the women whom Madson married are:

Mrs. Minnie Allen, 1418 Madison street, St. Louis, from whom he got $450 and a diamond ring.

Mrs. Alice Richardson, St. Louis, who lost $200 before Madson disappeared.

Mrs. Katherine Baughman, St. Louis, who lost $1,000.

Mrs. Maggie E. Bloom, Hannibal, Mo., who sold her home for Madson.

Mrs. A. Farran, Rocheport, Mo., from whom he obtained $2,000.

Mrs. Sylva Pollard De Bonnett, San Francisco, who lost her home as a result of the wedding.

Mrs. Henrietta Leopold, San Francisco, who lost $260.

Mrs. Jessie Tretheway, Stockton, Cal., who threw him out of her house when she tried to borrow money.

Mrs. Mary Wiggins Drown, Springfield, Mass., who lost $500.

Madson is said to have deserted each woman within a few hours after marrying her. Besides the women to whom the records show he was married, he was either engaged or married to women in the following cities: San Francisco, three; Oakland, Cal., two; Memphis, Tenn.; Lawrence, Kan.; Jonesboro, Ark.; Santa Rosa, Cal.; Gettysburg, Ohio; New Orleans; St. Johns, Mich.; Hamilton, Ont. He also is said to have a wife in Germany. Almost without exception his victims have been widows or divorced women of middle age.

CROWDS AT C. E. CONVENTION.

Annual Meeting of Religious Body Opens in St. Paul.

The twenty-fourth international Christian Endeavor convention formally opened in St. Paul, Minn., Wednesday, when the annual meeting of the United society of that body was held in the Ryan Hotel. Later the trustees held their annual meeting. The first big general meeting was held Wednesday evening. President Clark called the delegates to order in the Auditorium. All day crowds of endeavorers poured out of the union station. A systematic arrangement was followed in order that the newcomers might be properly cared for. Every delegation was met by some official of the reception committee and cards of instructions were given out, directing each member of the convention to the church where his headquarters are located.

Stables Burn; 150 Horses Lost.

The stables of the Warren Improvement Company were totally destroyed by fire in San Francisco. One hundred and fifty horses were burned to death.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Sustained heavy shipments through the banks, an absence of large failures, gratifying crop reports and strengthening demands for factory outputs and general merchandise reflect the heavy position which trade now occupies. High cost is responsible for a smaller outgo of breadstuffs, but forwardings of iron and steel, mine and forest products, raw materials for early conversion and staple wares exhibit considerable gain. There is also very heavy passenger travel and continued recovery in the earnings of Chicago steam roads.

While vessel capacity is not yet wholly employed, lake traffic is much better than at this time last year and rates obtained average higher. Prompt marketings during the harvests are foreshadowed by the advance inquiry for cars and this causes orders to be issued for additional equipment, much old rolling stock being found useless. Further developments in the prominent industries testify to confidence in the outlook. New plans announced include extensive additions to capacity at Gary and Indiana Harbor. Other enterprises assure large outlays for terminals, bridges and track elevation. Building construction progresses with the fine weather and there is remarkable consumption of structural materials of all kinds and increasing requests for lumber, brick, stone and cement.

Bank clearings, $252,163,481, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908, by 17.6 per cent, and compare with $268,401,391 in 1907. Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty, against twenty-three last week, twenty-five in 1908 and twenty-five in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number three, against five last week, six in 1908 and five in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Future trade continues good; confidence is unimpaired. Buyers are arriving in the larger markets. Cereal crop reports, despite rains in some winter wheat and corn growing sections, are encouraging. Country trade promises to be heavy on supplies in market. Industrial lines are becoming more active, calls for harvest hands absorb a large part of the floating supply of labor and the long-drawn out discussion regarding tariff matters promises to be soon ended. On the other hand, the general situation is not without its drawbacks. Thus cool or rainy weather has retarded retail trade over a goodly part of the country, particularly in the central West, South and Southwest, where floods have also deterred railway traffic and injured crops and country trade. At the same time, clearance sales are pretty general and these tend to stimulate business where normal weather conditions prevail. In wholesale and jobbing lines current trade is a midsummer character and re-orders are comparatively light. Moreover, the high prices that have prevailed for raw material suggest small profits on many manufactured articles. Collections range from poor to fair, though there are special lines which report prompt settlement.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 8 were 182, against 213 last week, 246 the same week of 1908, 185 in 1907, 143 in 1906 and 166 in 1905. The week's failures in Canada number 27, which compares with 22 last week and 39 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

A Hazard of Hearts

By ALIX JOHN

CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

And now, perhaps, she might never unpack her boxes under the shelter of that dilapidated, but friendly roof. If she could bring herself to entertain Mr. Stewart's mad scheme, a widely different prospect lay before her. She must think—she must think, and not sit there, raging in her heart that she, Mathilde Thorne, should have become an object of such contemptuous pity to the merest stranger, that he could consider her destiny a fit subject for the most reckless freak to lay hold of. With all her womanly pride up in arms, it was a trifle that seemed to sting the most, and that trifle was the fact of her name being Mathilde, after her French mother. How she now hated the name! How should she ever let Mr. Stewart know that it was hers. She knew that she should eventually have to tell him, for, somehow or other, even with every womanly instinct at bay against the proposition, she knew that she meant to at least consider the carrying out of this mad scheme. That it might, probably would, explode in a week, she believed. But in her present humor, the very recklessness of the project tempted her.

If she must always carry about with her the same numbed and bitter spirit, surely it were better to carry it in a comfortable carriage than afoot—first-class instead of third; surely it were better to be alone, with footman and maid in attendance, than alone, having to run her own errands, pack her own trunk, and wrangle with the landladies. If a Stewart family row ensued, it could hardly hurt her, either in feelings or in pocket. As for pride—her pride should be used by now to wounds, she said to herself bitterly, and even the daily pang of the daily act she might get used to. It was strange that with all her sullen indignation against Stewart, she still felt a full confidence that he would keep to his share of the bargain, and make no more claims upon her than he had pledged himself to. There was no grain of kindliness towards him—no satisfied vanity at his choice. There was only the reckless courage of the gambler who throws his last stake, knowing that it is insufficient to procure him one comfortable meal. What good could her life bring her? Let her throw it all upon this wild chance!

And so, at the sound of the first bell, she roused herself from that long intense absorption in the freaks of her own destiny, and then set herself to get ready for the Christmas feast.

There was a certain courageous and determined air of gaiety over the "St. Lawrence's" Christmas dinner table, worthy of a better cause. The electric lights gave it as white a radiance as they might have done to the daintiest feast. Wreathes of holly and mistletoe lay along by the fiddles, and the cook had surpassed himself in a brilliantly decorated boar's head, that held the place of honor on the captain's table. Captain and officers wore their best uniforms, and the sleekness of hair and brilliancy of neckties visible among the bag-men was a matter of evident admiration to the stewards.

Even the Northwest men looked a bit more brushed up than usual, though few of them, amongst whom was not Mr. Stewart, had attained the dignity of a black coat.

Mrs. Hunter, the sea captain's wife, had donned the black silk, lace collar, and cameo brooch which had graced tea meetings and church socials in every quarter of the globe. The bag-man's bride had emerged from her seclusion, pale, but gorgeous in a bodice of Stuart tartan velvet which had been the envy of all the girl friends privileged to inspect it in her trousseau.

Miss Thorne still kept her big red cloak around her, but to-night she had exchanged the black lace scarf which she usually wore over her head in the saloon, for one of creamy old Spanish lace, which she had fastened at the throat by a spray of bright-berried holly.

Captain Kerr and Mr. Hudson greeted her appearance with effusive inquiries after the headache.

"I should never have recovered the shock if you had not been able to come to my tree this evening," Charlie Hudson protested. "But she doesn't look as though she had a headache, does she, Kerr?"

"I'm rather afraid she does. Here, Miss Thorne, come and rest in your own corner while we are waiting for the Captain," the older man said kindly.

His greater feminine experience enabled him to see the traces of past storm in feverishly flushed cheeks and dark-rimmed eyes.

As befitted the more formal occasion, instead of singly slipping into their seats on arrival, they awaited in little groups the advent of the Captain.

Mr. Stewart had not yet appeared, and the girl raged inwardly at the face that she was trembling with nervous dread of the meeting.

But the Captain's honest red face and burly figure, smart in gold-laced coat, appeared, bearing down upon her corner.

"Come, Miss Thorne," he said in hearty tones, "you must take my arm tonight." And so led her to her place, while the first officer and doctor did respectively the same for Mrs. Hunter and the bride at their own tables.

With an air of great pomp and ceremony Charlie Hudson placed Mrs. Hunter's little girl beside him, while Captain Kerr took charge of the other, both children apparently stiffened into rigidity by the unaccustomed honor.

The Captain spoke in an aside to Miss Thorne. "I've just been to your cabin to look for you, and bring you in to dinner. I'd have missed my own girls twice as much if you hadn't been beside me tonight."

The girl turned on him eyes that had in them the suffering of a dumb animals, before which his own grew dim.

"You are very good to me," she said, simply.

"Not a bit, not a bit," he answered, patting her benevolently on the arm. "I know a plucky girl when I see one, and there is nothing that fetches me like pluck." During this dialogue, Stewart had quickly slipped into his seat opposite, and as the Captain attacked his soup, he spoke to Miss Thorne.

"I hope that the headache is better," he said. "I hunted up the stewardess just now, and she said that you had gone in."

"Thanks—yes—you are very kind," the girl stammered.

It maddened her that she could not speak connectedly for the heavy heartbeats under the scrutiny of those keen eyes.

Charlie Hudson, wittingly or not, came to her rescue.

"The next time that Miss Thorne has a headache we must hang a basket for cards for kind inquiries on her door, or the stewardess will strike," he said.

"Miss Thorne is going to be good, and not have any more headaches," the Captain announced, with benevolent despotism.

"I don't think that I shall have many more chances. The voyage is so nearly over now." As she spoke she looked across at Mr. Stewart.

He seemed to be taking up and answering a challenge.

"Don't be too sure of that," he said. "It's three good days yet, isn't it, Captain?"

"Something like that," the other answered, shortly.

Even the benevolence of Christmas could not make his answer anything but short to a remark referring to the speed or rather slowness of his ship.

Champagne had been ordered on all sides, and although of the quality usual on ship-board, it still served to loosen tongues, and promote laughter. Captain Kerr, sitting beside her, filled her glass, and Mathilde was glad of anything to stop the fits of nervous trembling that shook her.

Even Rosina and Gwendolin had taken a few dubious sips out of the glasses beside them before they were stopped by a stern mandate from their temperance mamma at the first officer's table.

"Never mind, Rosina," Charlie Hudson consoled his partner. "It is said to give little girls headaches, and ginger ale fizzes just as cheerfully. You shall ask me to your wedding, and drink my health then."

"I'm never going to marry," piped a shrill voice from the hitherto dumb Rosina. "I'm going to be a missionary to the Chinese. I put all my cents into a money-box for the heathen, now. She doesn't," pointing the severe finger of scorn at her sister opposite, who hung her head, convicted of crime.

"Well, of all the little prigs!" Charlie Hudson ejaculated in horror. "I think I'll swap partners with you, Kerr." Then, with a further effort at sociability. "And what do you do with your pennies, Gwendolin?"

That young woman raised the head that sunk under the weight of moral obliquity.

"They're cents, not pennies, and I put them all into my money-box, and when we go back to Boston mamma puts them into the savings bank for me, and I get interest. I've got five dollars and fifty-five cents in the Boston savings bank. I'll show you my book."

Having poured this out with shrill volubility, Gwendolin resumed her business-like dispatch of the plum-pudding, while Charlie Hudson looked helplessly across at Miss Thorne.

"One might as well have made dolls for a bank director and a Methodist parson," he said, but now Rosina's voice was heard in indignant accents. "We aren't Methodists, we're Baptists." And to this no one was found to answer.

Miss Thorne laughed. "Poor Mr. Hudson! Your Christmas 'made to order,' is turning out one of life's little ironies! Never mind! If you haven't the courage to present your offerings, give them to Captain Kerr and Mr. Stewart. They can hang them up by their looking-glasses for pin-cushions and to keep them from forgetting their Christmas at sea." And again she looked straight at Mr. Stewart.

The retort was obvious and he made it quickly. "Do you think that there is any likelihood of its being forgotten, then?" he asked pointedly, but all the answer that he received was a careless, "How should I know?" as she turned to something the steward offered her. But the time had come for toasts and speeches. The Captain opened the list with "the Queen," and the National Anthem rang out its heart-stirring rhythm, heartily echoed by the line of stewards and cooks in the doorway, and caught up by men in the cold and outer darkness of the deck.

The Captain's health was proposed, and cheered to the echo, and after this came various efforts, such as "the ladies," "absent friends," "sweethearts and wives." As the ladies' health was toasted Charlie Hudson leant across the table and held out his glass to clink against Miss Thorne's, according to the pretty old custom.

It was very much a matter of course for Stewart to follow suit, which he did in a tone which caught only her ear—"A pledge of good faith!" But his eyes sought in vain for any promise, for any light of friendship in her face.

Her smile was not defiant, but if it was not that it was certainly enigmatical.

CHAPTER V.

But Charlie Hudson had begun to fidget and exchange mysterious whispers with the head steward, who presently went and whispered to the Captain, who spoke up:

"Ladies and gentlemen, our Christmas dinner being happily ended, we will now adjourn to the other table where the Christmas tree, arranged by the kind exertions of a few of our passengers, is awaiting us."

There was a general move towards the center on the saloon, where, on a stand under the skylight, the tree shone resplendent from an electric light above.

Rosina had condescended, with portentous gravity, to carry round the captain's cap, from which the duplicate numbers were to be drawn.

The fun began with the captain, who drew first, being handed a dainty little ivory powder-puff box with looking-glass top.

It was quaint to see all the small belongings of travel that went to make up those gifts. Penknives, pencil-cases, and match-boxes, together with any variety of novels, formed the greater part of the masculine contribution; and from the women were one or two dainty little boxes and sachets, while Captain Kerr's cardboard furniture and animals reigned alone of their kind.

Miss Thorne had, as she thought, tucked herself in safely between the captain and Charlie Hudson; but, as they were both directing the fun, her refuge was not a sure one.

Presently she felt, rather than saw, that Stewart had slipped into the seat which Hudson had vacated.

"Did you see what I have drawn?" he asked, holding out a little scented sachet with her own initials in one corner.

"Yes; I saw Mr. Hudson give it to you," she answered, dryly.

Charlie Hudson drew a tortoise-shell hairpin; Mrs. Hunter a copy of Swinburne's poems.

"It will look smart on grandma's parlor table," she said, contemplating the bright cover with complacency.

"I would like to witness grandma's horror if she takes to studying it," Stewart said in an aside to Miss Thorne.

Charlie Hudson even mustered up courage to present a pair of dolls to the sisters, who gravely proceeded to investigate all the minutiae of their composition. In spite of the apparent incongruity of the objects drawn, Miss Thorne had doubts if there were not some method in the chance, especially when her number brought her a little silver photograph case in which she had seen a picture on one of Captain Kerr's children.

More was to follow, though, for, as the proceedings seemed to be drawing to a close, and the revived bride was executing a piece of musical fireworks at the piano, Hudson came to her with two small white packets in his hand.

"These are directed gifts," he said, handing them to her.

Miss Thorne's heart sank. She looked round, but the Captain had gone over to the piano. Mr. Stewart sat beside her, and Hudson stood looking on. She had nothing to do but open the parcels, and she chose that which she knew was addressed in Hudson's writing.

Its contents proved to be a pin with a nugget for a head, which she had admired one day when he was wearing it.

"Oh, but this is too good. I can't take this," she said, distressed.

"Please do," he urged; and as she looked into his honest face, pink with shyness, she yielded, thanking him gracefully. Then came the second package, and, do what she would, her fingers would bungle a bit over it.

The wrapping disclosed an old seal with arms engraved upon an amethyst. She let it lie upon her open palm and turned toward Stewart.

Charlie Hudson had fled, and they were practically alone, under shelter of a noisy chorus at the piano.

"Is this yours?" she asked.

"No; it is yours, if you will accept it. You don't mind, do you?" And in spite of his coolness, there was a touch of anxiety in his tone.

"I suppose that my keeping it settles the question?" she asked in the same dull, lifeless fashion.

He stared, puzzled; then spoke warmly. "No. Why, do you suppose that I should try to entrap you in that way? I had promised you only to ask for further discussion. Cannot I give you a trifle like that as a sign of friendship, just as Hudson has done?"

"I suppose so," she said slowly. "But these are the family arms, are they not? I could not take it without being in some measure pledged."

"Well, then, will you let it pledge you? I ask nothing better," he said, leaning forward.

"I suppose it might as well be now as any other time. What does it matter?" she said, wearily.

SIX TOES TO A FOOT.

Farming Community Remarkable for General Freak of Nature.

On the line between Lincoln and Sagadahoc counties is a settlement of thrifty farming folks who have a peculiarity which is but little known outside, says a Bangor (Me.) correspondent of the New York Herald. It is not visible and a stranger might go there year in and year out without ever discovering that they were any different from ordinary persons in a farming community. They are peculiar for the number of people in the settlement who have six toes on each foot, one more than they really ought to have and one more on each foot than they are entitled to.

The six-toe belt lies partly in the town of Dresden in Lincoln County and partly in Woolwich in Sagadahoc County. Just how many people there are who have more than their share of toes in that vicinity would be hard to say, but there is quite a number, and the way in which they came by them is a mystery in the first place, although there are a number of traditions as to how it happened.

Like many country districts, the people have been born, brought up, settled on farms in the vicinity and married into each other's families until time has produced a number of six-toed people in a comparatively small community.

The settlement is an ordinary country place, in which is a store or two, a postoffice and a grange hall which serves as a meeting place for all social occasions which are held in the homes of the people of the vicinity.

Rather than being a benefit to them, the extra toe is somewhat of an affliction in a number of ways, especially in getting shoes to fit them, for no shoemaker has yet ventured to manufacture a special line of boots for six-toed persons. So much of a bother has this been to some of the people that they have submitted to surgical treatment and had the offensive sixth member removed, that they might wear shoes much the same as others.

At a time, several years ago, when it was all the rage to wear the extreme pointed toed shoes these people were in a sorry plight. To crowd six toes into a shoe with a capacity for three, but in which vain man often crowded five, was too much for these people. They were fairly ostracized from being in the fashionable swim by the freak of nature which put them out of the running. Being possessed of sound sense they submitted to the inevitable and waited until their five-toed brethren had become crippled by the freak styles and then they were in the swim again with broad-toed shoes.

How it happened that this colony of six-toed people settled in this place is hard to explain. Tradition has it that some man of several generations ago settled in that vicinity, and while at work in the woods split a toe with an ax, and, instead of adhering, the two parts separated and in the course of time as the generations passed the sixth toe made its appearance in a more perfect form. This theory does not find many ready believers among the people there, who have given up accounting for it.

The sixth toe is an offshoot from the little toe of the ordinary foot. It is perfect in shape, although it is not always in alignment with the other five toes of the foot. For this reason it is troublesome, and becomes more so as the people advance in years.

Life is learning, suffering, loving; and the greatest of these is loving.—Ellen Key.

Women and the Home

The Woman Who Never Reads.

"I love my mother-in-law," said a young woman recently, "but a visit from her almost gives me nervous prostration. She is kindness itself, would do anything for me, except leave me alone five minutes at a time. She is one of those uncomfortable people who never reads, but sits with her hands folded hour after hour and expects to talk or be talked to. My children are going to be readers if I have to beat a love of books into them."

There are few characetristics more trying than not to read. If you do not love books for their own sake, cultivate a taste for them in the interest of your own popularity. The woman who never reads is rarely a popular guest. She is a dead weight on her hostess and wears thin the utmost hospitality. If you have a friend in your house who, you know, is only too pleased to get a chance at a book, you do not worry about her entertaining.

Every housekeeper has duties that must be attended to, and to hustle them through while a stranger waits idly for your return, is conducive to nerve strain. Conversation, like bonbons, should be taken in moderation. About the only one that can thoroughly enjoy unlimited chatter is a member of the monkey tribe. To talk the clock around generally means words—not ideas. Even though the woman who never reads has a fondness for the needle, it does not help the harassed entertainer much. Besides being a bore to others, the woman who never reads generally is a bore to herself. The true book lover is dependent on no one for her amusements; "What shall I do next?" is never on her lips, and "ennui" is a state unknown. The atmosphere of good books makes for a refinement that levels rank and social position. The woman who knows intimately the master minds of the world, who keeps up with current events, has within herself a well-spring of content, and rarely is a source of discontent to her friends.

Blast for Woman Suffrage.

Bishop William Croswell Doane said in an address the other day to the graduating class of St. Agnes' school at Albany, N. Y.:

"I cannot count it necessary and perhaps it is not wise for me to caution you against the loudly shrieked call to give women the right to vote and to be voted for.

"I am disposed to think that the quiet and decent appeal of a few of the so-called suffragists will be so drowned in the sort of howling dervish performance of the so-called suffragettes that it will fail of any effect.

"At any rate, the argument should be addressed rather to legislators than to you, except so far as one is justified in saying here to you that your womenhood will gain nothing by suffrage and is losing every day in its dignity and its true influence by the hysterical clamor which is employed in the pursuit of this chimera."

The girl who can sew has great advantage over the one who cannot, for if she studies the gowns here pictured she can evolve with very little trouble and expense a beautiful frock for afternoon or church wear. One that, if made by a fashionable modiste, would cost $50 or more, can be made cheaply at home. Women's apparel is not closely fitted nowadays, which makes it easier for the amateur dressmaker. The first picture shows a princess gown of figured foulard in brown and tan, with yoke and sleeves of cream-colored net.

The coat is of heavy brown linen with wide insets of coarse linen lace of the same color. Around the neck is a fold of bias black satin passing through rings covered with crochet. A brown hat faced with black, trimmed with short brown ostrich feathers and black aigrette, is worn with this suit. The second figure is another adaptation of the princess. It can be made of any color, in any shade, with hat in tones to match. The principal note is the touch of black that seems necessary to the fashionable frocks of the season.

To Clean Papered Walls.

Make a dough of flour and cold water and knead, as you would bread, until it is free from stickiness and becomes perfectly smooth. A piece of this rubbed over the paper will make it appear as fresh as new. One piece may be used for a large surface, though it should be changed for a clean piece before it is too much soiled. If you have plain paper on your walls and it is faded or spotted, mix some wall finish, of a desired color, rather thick, and apply it swiftly over the wall. If done carefully and with dispatch the paper will not become wet enough to come off, and will dry quickly, when it will look like new.

Shirt Waist Barrel.

You will find a shirt waist barrel more desirable than a box. Get a medium-sized barrel. Line with some pretty tinted cheesecloth. Six inches from top screw in a dozen small brass hooks. For outside covering make three frills of bright flowered silkoline. Pad and cover the lid with the same material as sides, finishing edge with a small double frill. Insert a small brass handle in top and with four castors put on bottom of barrel you have a something useful. This can be used for a laundry barrel.

Overcoming Mildew.

A cure for mildew that is the remedy of an old negro laundress is excellent for all white goods and will not injure fine materials. Pour a quart of boiling water over two ounces of chloride of lime, add three quarts of cold water, let the mixture stand until settled, strain and it is ready for use. The material should be steeped in the lime water for a day or over night, when the spots will be found to have disappeared.

To Clean a Panama Hat.

If a Panama hat is not too soiled it may be nicely cleaned by rubbing all over with stale bread. Take about half a loaf of bread about one or two days old and rub the cut end well over the hat. As the bread becomes soiled cut off a slice so as to leave a clean surface, and continue rubbing the hat. You will be surprised at the amount of grime and dust it will remove.

Can Cook While She Eats.

An electric device is now so arranged that your bread can be toasted, and cakes and muffins can be baked on the breakfast table. The busy housewife, who is obliged to do without help, can now enjoy her meal as she cooks—that is provided she can have the electricity.

Good Fly Poison.

A simple poison for flies is made by boiling a quarter of an ounce of small chips of quassia in one pint of water. When taken from the fire add half a cupful of molasses. Wherever this is placed on a saucer the flies soon congregate, to their own destruction.

Using a Scalp Tonic.

The woman who is ordered to use a tonic on her scalp must know how to apply it or her hair will be in worse condition than if none were used. The ideal method is to have the tonic rubbed in by a hairdresser, but as that is out of the question to most women, the next best thing is to own either a small oil can, such as can be bought for 10 cents, or a medicine dropper. Put the tonic in either of these receptacles, which are equally good to distribute the liquid evenly on the scalp without wetting the hair. Divide hair into strands and go over each part carefully before making a new division. While the tonic is being applied with one hand rub it in well with the finger tips of the other hand.

Cupid Defensive.

"There were something like 46,000 less marriages in New York State during 1908 than there should have been under normal conditions of increase," writes Richard Maxwell Winans in Harper's Weekly. The author ascribes this fact to the new law compelling brides and bridegrooms to appear in person at the City Hall in order to secure licenses. The publicity and its attendant unpleasantness have driven many couples to take advantage of the facilities for marriage that are offered by adjacent States.

Man a Girl Likes.

You couldn't get a girl to confess it, but the man she most admires is often——

He whose ideas never coincide with her own.

He who tells her point-blank that he hates to see powder on her face.

He who never says that some other girl looks pretty.

He who always appears interested when she airs her little tribulations.

Keep Umbrella in Good Order.

Open your umbrellas and place a drop of oil in each joint; now open and close the umbrella several times to insure the oil penetrating to where it is most needed. Wipe off any superfluous oil, and in case some gets on the cover, remove with gasoline. Repeat this process in the course of a few weeks and note how much less you spend on umbrellas. In the matter of the children's umbrellas, one lasts as long as three formerly lasted before we thought of the above plan.

Pale Green Foulard.

Bordered foulard in a delightful shade of green was used for an attractive gown patterned after above model. The yoke of bodice is formed of fan plaits of white silk mousseline, with stock, tab and side pieces of lace. The bertha band and pointed strap pieces are made from the border, which has an embroidered ring in green several shades darker than material. These are edged top and bottom with velvet ribbon in dark green. Fancy crochet buttons are placed in each point. Four deep circular tucks form the blouse and the same number of tucks are used in tops of sleeves. The skirt is plain, the dotted border forming the hem.

No Need of a Husband.

A certain spinster was being condoled with because she had no husband. "Why," she said, "I don't want a husband. I'm just as well off. You see, I have a dog, and he growls; I have a parrot, and he swears; I have a cat, and he stays out nights. Now, why should I get married?"

Marriage Among Coeds.

Startled by the announcement during a recent week of ten engagements among the students of the University of California, the faculty of that institution has decided to add a course of household economics to the curriculum of the coming summer session.

To Wash Silk Stockings.

Add a teaspoonful of sugar of lead to the water in which fine silk hosiery is washed to prevent the delicate colors from fading.

Nameless Women.

"Women in Korea have often no name at all," said Dr. Meir, a returned English missionary. "They are referred to as 'Look here.'"

SOME PRETTY FROCKS FOR LITTLE GIRLS.

The school frock of navy blue serge is worn over a white skirt powdered with currant-red spots; while the little walking costume is carried out in cream cloth trimmed with soutache. The charming little frock of Japanese blue shantung is trimmed with embroidery. The sturdy little 4-year-old wears a little pale blue cashmere frock worked in soutache.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

William Schroeder, 7 years old, fell from the rear end of a wagon at Evansville and suffered concussion of the brain and internal injuries. He will probably die.

With a lighted candle in his hand Lester Bing began a search for a moth in a large closet at his home in the Durbin flats in Anderson. The closet contained practically the entire wardrobe of Bing and his wife, which they valued at $300. The candle set fire to the clothing, which was destroyed before the fire department arrived.

Will Russell, five miles east of Arcadia, has invented a corn-husking machine, which he says can be constructed for $150. It is of simple design and can be built for husking one or two rows at a time, as desired. The machine, after taking the corn from the stalk, removes the husk and drops the bare ear into a wagon alongside the machine. Mr. Russell says the machine will be a great saver of manual labor.

Miss Mabel Ray Bundy, the great-granddaughter of Frances Slocum, known in history as "The White Rose of the Miamis," was married a few days ago to Roy Sausaman, of Peru. The bride was recently graduated from college at Lawrence, Kas. Frances Slocum was stolen by Indians when a little girl, and grew up with the Miamis, by whom she was beloved. She became a great power among them. A monument was recently erected to her memory.

Last summer a pair of redbirds came to the crimson rambler rose bush that runs over the veranda at W. A. Bragg's house at Milton. They became very tame, and allowed members of the family to peep into their nest at times. One night after the eggs were hatched some animal destroyed the young birds, and the parent birds were greatly distressed. This year two redbirds, presumably the same pair, came again to the crimson rambler bush and again built their nest. This time they hatched and reared their brood.

Mrs. William J. Moore, of Bedford, was nearly frightened out of her wits when she moved a seat on the veranda at her home away from a window, and discovered a large snake which was killed by a neighbor. The reptile measured 5 feet 5 inches and was large in proportion to its length. It was of a copper color, and so far no one has been able to tell to what species it belongs. In color it resembled a copperhead, but the body was not the shape of that species. It is believed to have escaped from its cage at a carnival show that had been exhibiting on the grounds near by.

Farmers in Elkhart County are elated over the discovery of what they believe to be the certain destroyer of the potato bug. A bug with variegated rings in size slightly smaller than the potato bug has made its appearance in the potato patches west of Goshen, and the new arrivals are waging a deadly war on the potato bug. Moving from one plant to another the new arrivals make short work of the potato bug, eating them quickly and not leaving a single one on the plant. If the new variety of bug continues to increase, there will soon not be a potato bug in Elkhart County, and the potato bug nuisance will soon be ended. A number of farmers are already experimenting and specimens of the bug will be sent to Purdue University.

There was an interesting reunion at Boyd Park, east of Peru, recently. Those in attendance being the remaining members of the Miami tribe of Indians in that locality. The old Miami reserve was formerly located between Huntington and Peru and some members of the original families still live. Chief Gabriel Godfroy, the last lineal descendant of the Miami chieftains, and his family were among the picnickers.

Father William Byrne, of Cork, Ireland, who is visiting Terre Haute relatives, said mass in his church in Ireland one Sunday and in a Terre Haute church the following Sunday. After mass in his church on Sunday he was driven into Cork, his church being outside the city, and obtaining passage on a fast liner, arrived in New York the following Friday. Making close connection with a fast train, he arrived in Terre Haute Saturday noon, so that really he was only six days coming from Cork to Terre Haute.

Charles Richardson, proprietor of the Putnam House in Mitchell, regards 25 cents a pound as too high for lead, even if it is molded into bullets, and hereafter he will try to buy his spring chickens full dressed instead of taking them from hucksters "in feathers and on the hoof." Mr. Richardson has been feeding his guests with "spring broilers." Finding a surprising difference between the weight of the chickens when alive and when dressed he made an investigation and found their craws filled with home molded bullets. There was enough lead to start a small arsenal.

A county evangelitsic campaign, under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville, has just been concluded at Angola, with four hundred additions to the Christian churches of Steuben County. Last Sunday afternoon the Christian church in Angola made contributions to the amount of $15,350 for a modern church edifice, to be erected immediately at a cost of $30,000. The evangelistic campaign which Mr. Scoville conducted attracted large audiences, which assembled in a tabernacle seating 1,500.

While Claude Veach, a young man employed in Muncie, was dining in an uptown restaurant, he was fairly taken off his feet by a beautiful, black-eyed girl who came into the place and, throwing her arms about him in the presence of all the diners, kissed him. His embarrassment was soon relieved, however, when the girl explained that she was his sister whom he had not seen for ten years. When Veach left his home in Bridgeport, Conn., more than ten years ago, his sister was a little girl in short dresses. Her appearance had so changed that he did not recognize her. Miss Veach was expected to visit her brother, but the latter had gone to the train on which she was supposed to arrive without finding her.

Republican Methods

AFTER years of demagoguery, sophistry and buncomb on the subject of tariff, it has remained for Elihu Root, junior senator from New York, to state in public debate the actual facts regarding the methods of the republican party in framing a tariff bill. Said Mr. Root, speaking in support of the corporation tax, "We have been here for over three months considering and discussing and voting upon the measure of protection that it is necessary to give to keep alive and prosperous the business of tens and hundreds of thousands of corporations engaged in manufacture and trade affected by the protective tariff. What do we know about these corporations? Upon one hand we have garbled and partial statements; upon the other equally garbled and partial statements; and no means of distinguishing the truth. We are under the necessity of proceeding by guess work, by conjecture, always with dissatisfaction because we recognize the chance that we may have guessed wrong about whose statements come nearest to the truth. I should like to see in the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue the next time a tariff bill comes before congress, statements, under oath, and tested year by year, about the business of all this vast multitude of corporations that come appealing to us for help, so that we shall not again be compelled to come to the conclusion that all the business of the United States is on the brink of failure." Never was there a franker statement of the methods by which tariff bills are framed than that made by the senator from New York. Senators and representatives, a large majority of whom are lawyers, have accepted almost without question the ex parte statements of interested persons and companies and have fixed tariff rates in accordance with their representations and demands. The current tariff revision is by no means the revision downward implied by the republican platform and specifically promised by the republican presidential candidate. But present indications all point to the inclusion in the tariff bill of certain provisions which will preclude in the future the hit or miss methods of the past and render it impossible for senators and representatives extravagantly to swell the profits of their manufacturing constituents at the expense of the consumer without detection.

The "Non-Partisan" Program

THERE are signs that the republicans and the leaders of the Anti-Saloon League are laying the ground work for a new game which they hope to play successfully in the next campaign. Fearful of the open support of their old allies, the republican politicians hope to profit through a "non-partisan" program that the league is now mapping out. The Indianapolis Star, the republican state organ, has this to say of the league's plans:

"Profiting by their experience in past temperance fights, the officers of the league believe that a fight for state-wide prohibition should be wholly of a non-partisan character. They maintain that the only reason they supported the republican party last year was because it declared for county local option, whereas the democratic party was in favor of only the ward and township unit. They believe it unwise to allow the question to be made a partisan political one."

The democratic party, of course, will pursue the even tenor of its way, and it can only do it by being honest with itself. It cannot hope for any support from the Anti-Saloon League unless it commits itself to state prohibition, which it has never thought of doing. Ex-Governor Hanly has bespoken for that issue for the republicans. And then there is the old-fashioned prohibition party, which has a prescriptive monopoly of the issue of which it bases its rights to live.

A Shameful "Policy"

IN speaking of the scandalous mismanagement that is charged against the trustees and superintendent of the Jeffersonville reformatory, the Indianapolis Sun says:

The "policy" of Superintendent Whittaker and the reformatory board of trustees, under which good and hard working and "handy" prisoners are held in bondage to work for contractors, or to earn money on which others may draw interest; the policy under which men of clear records are robbed of the liberty the law gives them after the terms of their minimum sentences have run out, is being attacked on all sides.

Such a policy if pursued should be attacked and condemned. It is an outrage on civilization. According to charges that have been made prisoners have been held for years after they had earned a parole, largely because they were good workmen and valuable to the prison contractors.

THE terms of the custodian and engineer of the state house expired the middle of April. These officials had been appointed by the republican governors for twelve years under the terms of an act passed in 1897. Governor Marshall, convinced that he had at least equal authority to make these appointments, issued commissions to two democrats. Thereupon State Auditor Billheimer and Secretary of State Sims, proceding under an act of 1895, which Governor Matthews had vetoed and which no one considered of any validity (although the redolent Owen had printed it in the official acts of 1895) appointed two republicans. And now the supreme court has decided that an act which neither Governor Mount, Durbin nor Hanly would recognize, which no subsequent legislature heeded, and which no administrative office thought valid until a democratic governor was elected, is all right. By this decision the republicans will continue to hold a large amount of state house patronage.

Forgotten Trouble

Do you know what it was that caused you to fret,
Only a year ago?
Can you tell me the source of your utmost regret,
Only a year ago?
It looked big to you then and you moped and you pined,
The long nights were sleepless and troubled your mind,
Yet you can't tell what happened, in looking behind,
Only a year ago!

Do you know why you frowned as you journeyed your way,
Only a month ago?
Can you tell now what made all your blue skies look gray,
Only a month ago?
What trouble was it that your happiness marred,
That caused you to say that your heart had grown hard,
And from all future joys in this world you were barred,
Only a month ago?

You've forgotten them all, both the great and the small,
The pain and the woe;
For few are the troubles we ever recall
As onward we go.
Ah, few are the troubles, my brother, that last,
They seem big at first, but the moment's they're past,
They slip from the mind, for they never stick fast.
It is well that it's so.

Eat What

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

Else you can't gain strength, nor can you strengthen your stomach if it is weak.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

But this food must be digested, and it must be digested thoroughly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

Our Guarantee

This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family.

It would bankrupt us.

The government estimates tell us that the crops now maturing in the United States overshadow any year in our history. A gain of $722,000,000 bushels in all grains over the totals of 1908, is promised and the record yield of 1906 will be exceeded. The value of the 1909 crop to the farmer is estimated at $2,750,000,000.

The American Woolen Co., commonly called the woolen trust, is preparing to levy an extra tribute of at least 22 per cent on the American consumers. Already it has formally notified the manufacturers of clothing and underclothing to get ready to advance the prices of all goods from 30 to 50 per cent. This means that a suit of clothes will cost on the average $5 more next fall and winter than a year ago.

Just remember that while Mr. Aldrich has his way and you are paying more for what you eat and drink and wear, you are at the same time putting food in the mouths of our infant industries. If it were not for the wise provisions made by the humane and benevolent Uncle Aldrich a lot of little starvelings like the steel trust, the sugar trust, the tobacco trust, the pulp and paper trust, the leather trust, the beef trust and other bottle-raised cherubs their good foster mother, old Lady Protective Tariff, has at great pains brought so far up by hand, there would be such a slaughter of innocence as would make Herod seem the paragon of humanity. Think upon these things when you have to look a price boost in the face.

As the time approaches for holding the city primaries, it behooves the democrats of Butler to select some worthy citizen as their standard bearer in the fall election. Several names have already been mentioned, among the most prominent being T. A. Hoffman, S. G. Stone and Wm. Mutzfeld. Each of these gentlemen have rendered excellent service to the city, and either of them would be very acceptable to the voters. Let us get together and select our candidates whom we wish to be voted for at the primaries. New councilmen and other city officials are to be elected. Let the democrats not be found lagging this fall. We have plenty of good timber and can win if we get to hustling.

Most Dangerous Work in Chicago is the Most Fascinating

Putting down the foundation of the new Northwestern Railway station in Chicago are the caisson workers, who follow one of the most dangerous and yet one of the most fascinating occupations in the world, G. R. Clarke writes in the Chicago Tribune of their work, and from that paper the accompanying illustration is reproduced. The men engaged in this work are the "sand hogs,"—known technically and more euphoniously as caissoniers.

No union could ask better than $4 for an eighty minute day and that divided into two shifts, and yet these are the terms given to the lowest grade workmen who work under high pressure.

From twenty pounds pressure up salaries increase rapidly, and even in the extremely low pressure that is found necessary by the foundation company which is doing the work in Chicago $3.50 for a day of eight hours is paid to the least important man on the job.

This sounds good to the laborer, but at one corner of any plant which is using high pressure will be found a little contrivance which tells the story of the dangers to health which are incurred by the man who works "under air." It is called the hospital and is a metal cylinder 8 feet in diameter and 15 feet long. It is divided into two compartments, one with a couch and another in which sits a valve tender. For this is an air chamber for recovering purposes; in other words, a medical lock, and it is attached to the air tanks in the same way as the working cribs underground. This is for the gradual reduction of air for the man who has been affected by the "bends," the professional term for the disease induced by high pressure.

"Bends" May End in Paralysis.

This disease, which may finally end in paralysis, is the great chance taken by the "sand hog," although it is the one on which he least reckons, as what the effect will be is something which it is impossible to estimate beforehand. With what seems to be perfect physical condition he may drop dead the first time he is subjected to high pressure, and again, although 40 is supposed to be the age limit under which a man can work, there is one foreman at Canal and Madison streets who is over 55 and still going in. At this plant there is a little shelter shed covering the valve which regulates the air in each caisson. And under many of these sit men paralyzed from the waist down who have mercifully been given jobs of valve keepers by the company. These are visible proofs of the final results which may be expected by the caisson worker if he follows the game long enough.

"Yet there is no work in the world which seems to exercise such a fascination for the worker," says the superintendent of the work. "We did not have to pay the fare of a single man working to bring him to Chicago, strange as it may seem, for this would be expected in getting a set of specialists. However, the "sand hog" becomes used to the work and a gang of men will attach themselves to a foreman. This crew will go wherever they hear of a job around the country. They get used to the high wages, too, and they seem to have the faculty of working together.

At the work in Chicago the water level is low, about ninety feet below the surface, and consequently with the work at a depth of 100 feet the pressure of air at this time was as low as seven or eight pounds. If you are so fortunate as to obtain a permit to make the trip into the bottom of one of these piers there are things to be considered before taking the trip even into light pressure.

That people over 40 should not go down is a general rule. If anything is wrong with the heart and lungs "stay away" is the advice given. That one should be in perfect condition, and even then not try to enter without having eaten a square meal, is another warning given by the superintendent. There is one more which he will probably not mention if he is gallant, and that is that the lock sometimes proves dangerous for gray-haired people. A certain arterial condition is supposed to go with gray hair, which makes them susceptible to higher atmospheric pressure.

If you can pass all these obstacles, or if you are inclined to take the risk, you climb into the bucket and sit on the edge with your feet inside if you are a novice. The foreman jumps lightly on the opposite side of the bucket, standing on the edge, the signal is given and you are off.

"Sensation" Starts in Lock.

When you have reached the lock the door opens downward, the foreman jumps in and steers you through in the bucket with the warning, "Head in." You shrink as close as possible to the rope and go through the hole without any more damage than grazing your back slightly on the edge. You are helped to climb out awkwardly, but there isn't much "out." Fortunately the door above and the one in the floor below are placed over to one side of the circular floor and ceiling. You get over on this little foothold and draw your head over against the wall when the lock tender shouts "heads low," and draws the door up in place, above you.

The lock keeper forces the door up against the frame, touches the valve, and then with a cool whirring sound the compressed air is allowed to enter gradually.

Now is experienced the "sensation" which is the reward of those who have made the descent in the character of sensation hunters. Sharp shooting pains in the ears follow the turning on of the air, which may be from two to forty-five pounds above ordinary atmosphere, although you will not be allowed in as a novice if the pressure is above twenty.

"Stop!" you cry to the foreman, or rather you try to, for to talk above the inrushing air is like trying to be heard above rushing waves.

"Close your mouth and hold your nose and swallow hard," the foreman shouts—"it is nearly all in now."

As soon as it is "all in," you are notified by the sudden dropping of the door at your feet into the lower caisson. You have been hugging the little half moon space in the floor, which is like an "isle of safety," waiting for this event, and the foreman and the lock keeper have been propping themselves across from one wall to the other without any foothold in a way that can only be understood by the professional.

You now climb into the bucket again and are lowered—ducking carefully—into the crib. You are now face to face with a "sand hog"—two of them. In fact, a boss and his hand who have stopped work in expectation of a visit from above.

The first thing noticed is that the voices of the workmen sound strangely mellifluous, and suddenly it begins to dawn on the visitor that his own voice is without a twang, and that he is strangely exhilarated. Energy is at its lightest and easiest, and, although the air makes you perspire, it is with the sensation of something cool. You begin to see why the caissonier loves his work. The head of the gang here has worked on several jobs under high pressure, the last place at thirty-seven pounds.

"The cutting edge" on the bottom of the sections of cylinder which form the walls of the caisson are pointed out as they lay around on the ground above. There they are subdivided to let down more easily. Here they were in place showing the lining of wooden lagging which looks frail until it is explained that they are only for gripping on the concrete. The "cutting rim" is forced down by pack-screws attached to the sides of the cylinder.

A—Air lock imbedded in concrete, showing trap door in lock head open.

B—Air duct from surface to lower workings.

C—Pipe through which air is permitted to enter lock, valve D, from caisson below, and through which it is released by means of valve E.

F—Workmen employed 100 feet below the surface in an air pressure eight pounds in excess of normal.

G—Concrete supporting air lock.

H—Lagging and shields to prevent outside material from caving in.

I—Bucket used to raise refuse and the means used by workmen in entering and leaving caisson.

Coming Out Reverses Operation.

It is now time for that reverse operation of coming out of the lock. You see the last of the caissoniers down at the bottom with their electric light and are then drawn up into the chamber with the door closed tightly after you.

Here the lock tender takes charge again; he lives here, with his covered electric light, and his valves. It is only lately that electricity has been used for lighting—candles used to be the medium of illumination, with the result that high pressure carbon was thrown off in large quantities that blackened and choked lungs and added to the other troubles of the men. Now he is cozily lighted with a bulb in a little wire frame.

The excess of oxygen has given you a beautiful feeling of energy, which lasts a little while after you come out, but later there is a dreamy languor and drowsiness. If this is the sensation even after experiencing but eight pounds pressure, you begin to wonder what is the limit of joy of this mysterious caissonier who lives more than half of his life at an average of twenty.

THREW A PIG AT HER.

"One day in the barnyard my husband became so angry at me that he picked up a pig and hurled it at my head. I dodged, but the pig was killed," said Mrs. Edith Sweatland, of Flint, Mich., in her suit for divorce, which was granted. The court also allowed her $800 alimony.

WHIPPING POST USED IN CANADA

The whipping post as a punishment for crime was used at Wattsburg, a mining town in the Crow's Nest Pass district, British Columbia. A young man named Anderson confessed and chose the lash in preference to jail. He was stripped, his hands were tied to the post above his head, and as he leaned forward the last was applied vigorously.

Lightning Conductors on Ships.

In spite of the popular impression to the contrary ships remote from the land are seldom damaged by lightning, although some of the most awe-inspiring displays of atmospheric electricity are frequently witnessed by those on board them.

Standing rigging and even parts of the running gear are now made of steel wire, and this substitute for the old-fashioned hemp serves the purpose of lightning conductor when the ship is not fitted with such an aid to safety. The electric current is conveyed down the wire rigging and reaches the sea through the vessel's metal hull. Damage occurs only if the current be interrupted on its way to earth. In a comparatively large proportion of instances the foreroyal truck is struck by lightning, that of the main less frequently and the mizzen least of the three.

Very serious casualties under this head occurred to warships and merchant vessels in the days of wooden hulls and hempen rigging. Many vessels are now fitted with lightning conductors of approved types, lest the wire rigging should fail to carry off the electric current.

CROWN OF NATION'S CAPITOL.

Statue of Liberty, Too High for Close Study, Symbolic of the Union.

"Armed Liberty," the magnificent statue that crowns the dome of the Capitol, is by far the most symbolic of all the statues in Washington. Beautiful and reposeful, yet with an air of vigilance, it is perhaps the least appreciated of the city's statues, possibly because of its being placed at such an altitude that it cannot easily be studied. The original plans of the Capitol called for a statue to surmount the dome, but no title was then given it, and although more than half a century has elapsed since its erection, comparatively few people know its real name.

The statue was modeled by Thomas Crawford, father of the novelist, the late F. Marion Crawford. It was cast at a Maryland foundry. Jefferson Davis was Secretary of War when the model was first presented at the War Department. The statue then wore a liberty cap and carried a bundle of rods. Davis objected to the liberty cap as being emblematic of emancipated slaves, while Americans were free born. He also thought the bundle of rods, suggesting the functions of the Roman lictor, had lost its symbolic character. Because of these criticisms of Secretary Davis the model was changed and the "Armed Lady" was evolved.

The statue is nine feet six inches tall and weighs 14,985 pounds. It was put in place Dec. 2, 1863. The head is thrown back and adorned with eagle's beak and plumes. The right hand rests on a sword and the left holds an olive branch and a shield. The mantle is gracefully draped and is held by a brooch bearing "U. S." on its face. The helmet is encircled with stars. The supporting globe bears the legend, "E Pluribus Unum."—San Francisco Argonaut.

ORIGIN

Of a Famous Human Food.

The story of great discoveries or inventions is always of interest.

An active brain worker who found himself hampered by lack of bodily strength and vigor and could not carry out the plans and enterprises he knew how to conduct, was led to study various foods and their effects upon the human system. In other words, before he could carry out his plans he had to find a food that would carry him along and renew his physical and mental strength.

He knew that a food which was a brain and nerve builder (rather than a mere fat maker) was universally needed. He knew that meat with the average man does not accomplish the desired results. He knew that the soft gray substance in brain and nerve centers is made from Albumen and Phosphate of Potash obtained from food. Then he started to solve the problem.

Careful and extensive experiments evolved Grape-Nuts, the now famous food. It contains the brain and nerve building food elements in condition for easy digestion.

The result of eating Grape-Nuts daily is easily seen in a marked sturdiness and activity of the brain and nervous system, making it a pleasure for one to carry on the daily duties without fatigue or exhaustion.

Grape-Nuts food is in no sense a stimulant but is simply food which renews and replaces the daily waste of brain and nerves.

Its flavour is charming and being fully and thoroughly cooked at the factory it is served instantly with cream.

The signature of the brain worker spoken of, C. W. Post, is to be seen on each genuine package of Grape-Nuts.

Girl's Head Encrusted—Feared Loss of All Her Hair—Baby Had Milk Crust—Missionary's Wife Made Perfect Cures by Cuticura.

"For several years my husband was a missionary in the Southwest. Every one in that high and dry atmosphere has more or less trouble with dandruff and my daughter's scalp became so encrusted with it that I was alarmed for fear she would lose all her hair. After trying various remedies, in desperation I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. They left the scalp beautifully clean and free from dandruff and I am happy to say that the Cuticura Remedies were a complete success. I have also used successfully the Cuticura Remedies for so-called 'milk-crust' on baby's head. Cuticura is a blessing. Mrs. J. A. Darling, 310 Fifth St., Carthage, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1908."

Strategy That Failed.

A lumberman living in Minneapolis was reputed to be the wealthiest man living west of the Mississippi River He had been poor in his youth, however, and had never overcome the economic habits that he had formed in his days of poverty and in the building of the foundation of his colossal fortune.

His two sons, however, were differently trained, and when they returned from Yale they were seized with a desire, born no doubt of filial love, to fix the old man up. They knew that it was vain to attempt to induce him to buy clothes other than the shabby and threadbare garments he had worn for years and they resorted to strategy.

They went to a tailor and told him to make a $75 coat for their father, but to tell him that the price was $15 The loving sons promised to pay the difference from the amounts they drew from their father's bank account.

The old man finally consented, after much arguing, to buy a $15 coat, and the coat was made. The old man paid over the $15, and before he had gone more than two blocks he was met by an acquaintance, who was astounded to see the multi-millionaire in the uncustomary garment. He commented on the quality of the coat and, his forefathers having been Englishmen, he asked how much it cost.

"Fifteen dollars."

"Fifteen dollars? I'll give you $20!"

"It's yours!"

Improve Our Waterways.

While peanut politicians have bickered and cackled, while hundreds of millions have been frittered away in happy-go-lucky improvements of waterways, the greatest nation in the world has been choked by its railroads. These railroads have ruled us and plundered us, only to fail us in time of need. Wheat has actually rotted under the snow for want of cars. Yet all the time water has been running down hill, straight from producing areas to consuming centers. We must have a comprehensive plan that will make all our cities seaports. Such a plan will call for bold men with startling ideas, and for billions of money; but it means a new America. We shall then be able to feed the world without paying six times too much for the carriage of the food that we send to the world. "Squeeze the water from between the rails," says Mr. Hough, in Success Magazine, "and let it run between the banks." We can do all this just so soon as we can learn to think nationally.

A Rare Good Thing.

"Am using ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE, and can truly say I would not have been without it so long, had I known the relief it would give my aching feet. I think it a rare good thing for anyone having sore or tired feet.—Mrs. Matilda Holtwert, Providence, R. I." Sold by all Druggists, 25c. Ask to-day.

An Intermittent Memory.

A small customer appeared at the grocery store, says a writer in the Century Magazine, and the smiling grocer asked him what he wanted.

"Please, mister," said the boy, "I can't remember what ma sent me for, but you can give me two cents' worth o' peppermint candy, 'cause she said I could keep the change."

Disenchantment.

They were in the thick of their first quarrel.

"I thought your tastes were simple," said the husband. "I didn't expect to find you such a high flier."

"Yes, you did," she answered: "you knew all about my being a high flier, as you call it, but you thought I'd be dirigible!"

His Experience.

Man's By-Products.

There is enough hydrogen gas in a man, says the Medical Index Lancet, to carry him up to the clouds. He contains enough fat to make 75 candles and a large cake of soap, and enough phosphorus to make 8,064 boxes of matches. His remaining constituents will yield, if utilized, six cruets of salt, a bowl of sugar and ten gallons of water.

Curious Giant Cranes.

Australia, the land of oddities, animal, vegetable and mineral, has few more curious creatures than the giant cranes—often five and six feet in height, with beautiful blue-gray plumage—which are called native companions. These huge birds mate for life and, as mates, are singularly and touchingly devoted to one another.

FARMS AND FARMERS

Good Hay Stacker.

The sizes of timbers used in this design for a hay stacker vary from 2 inches by 4 inches to 4 inches by 5 inches. The bottom pieces marked 1 are 12 feet long and 4 inches by 5 inches, the side uprights are 14 feet long; the cross piece 5 is 13 feet of 3-inch by 5-inch stuff; No. 6 is 2 inches by 5 inches, and is bevelled on the front edge to allow the hay to slide over it easily, when being shoved on by the sweep. No. 13 is 8 feet by 2 inches by 4 inches, with the higher end 8 feet above the ground, so that when the stacker is on the ground the weight box No. 14 will be about 2 inches from the two pulleys on the upper end of No. 13. The rope for raising the stacker should be either inch or inch and a quarter.

The teeth on the stacker can be made of 2-inch by 4-inch pine scantling 10 feet long and bevelled on the upper side to allow the hay to slide easily. The short upright teeth on the stacker head should be about 5 feet long. They are bolted to the long teeth about 2 inches from the stacker head No. 5 and rest against the stacker head No. 6. The stacker arms No. 4 should be bolted to No. 2 with a large bolt about 12 inches from the ground.

Clean Farming Profitable.

Honest, now, don't you like to see a farm kept clean of all unnecessary trash and the fields clean of weeds? It really adds to the worth of the farm. In the eyes of the man passing by it is a better farm than the one beside it of equal soil, though weed-grown and brushy.

A great many folks pay no attention to the roadsides. Where a hedge is the outside fence, we have seen hedge brush grow from roots that had been exposed by road grading, until travel had actually been turned to the opposite because of it. This doesn't speak very well for the carefulness of the farmer. Of course there is always so much to do on a farm that some of it never gets done—any one who has farmed for as short a time as one year knows this—but the time required to do a little cleaning up is really shorter than a busy man believes. It is getting started at the work that comes hardest. The excuse of the man who does not have a clean-looking farm is usually that he does not care about selling, and it is worth as much to him that way as any. He does not figure in anything for satisfaction.—Farmers' Mail and Express.

Summer Care of Horses.

A great many horses are laid up every summer with sore shoulders. This can be remedied in a very large measure with sense and care.

A good horse collar is the main part of the harness and it should be of the very best kind and fit the animal's neck perfectly.

The collar should be kept clean at all times and the horse's shoulders well washed and brushed daily.

Much dust and dirt arise in the fields and on the roads during the warm season, and this is caught and held on the moist and sweaty shoulders and collar, there to form hard lumps and ridges.

Every time the collar is put on the horse it should be examined for those ridges and lumps. If any are found they should be carefully brushed and rubbed away.

After each day's work, especially in warm weather, bathe and clean the shoulders with a mixture of warm water, salt and soda.

Hot water is one of the best known natural agents for relieving soreness.

Squash Bugs.

The squash bug is a flat insect, rusty black in color, with yellow belly. It is about a half-inch long, and emits an offensive odor. It winters in the adult form underneath leaves, boards, etc., and lays its eggs on the under side of leaves in June. The young are hatched out in a short time. To get rid of them, hand picking in the morning and evening, when the bugs are less active, is a good plan. Kerosene emulsion diluted with twelve parts water sprinkled on and about plants, is recommended. Shingles or small boards put about the plants serve as hiding places for these insects, and then they can easily be killed.

What a Good Cow Will Make.

The milk produced by the average Missouri cow in a year will sell for about $50 at the creamery or when made into first-class butter. A good cow of the dairy breed will make at least $50 cash income every year. I have a list of about fifty Missouri farmers who report a cash income of $50 to $100 a cow every year, and these figures do not include the income from the sale of calves, and pigs fed on the skim-milk. "But," says one, "milking is a tremendous task." As a matter of fact, it takes only sixty hours, worth 15 cents an hour, to milk a cow twice a day for ten months.

Let the Old Cows Go.

After a cow has outlived the period of greatest usefulness, it is best to fill her place with another, and the best way we find to get rid of her is to dispose of her from grass. If a calf is by her side, the two are usually sold together, and the time of selling is at such time as the grass fat shows to the greatest advantage. When corn was lower in price than it is now it paid to corn-feed aging cows, but now it does not. More can be secured from the corn by putting it into steers and letting the old cows go with what grass fat they will carry —Farmers' Mail and Breeze.

Bitter Milk.

Bitter milk may originate from two sources. The first source is dependent upon the cow, while the second is due to the growth of bacteria in the milk after it has been drawn. The difference between these two classes of bitter milk is that the first has a decidedly acid taste when freshly drawn while the second class is sweet when taken from the cow, but the bitterness occurs after standing for a short time and increases in intensity. Bitter milk when produced in the udder may result from improper feeding with such of our Colorado herbs as lupines, artemisia and the like, or with the raw Swedish turnips, cabbages, etc Bitter milk may be observed during the last stage of lactation and has followed the infection of ducts with bacteria which act on the proteids as an enzyme, converting them into peptones and other products to which the bitter taste is probably due.—Field and Farm.

A Useful Bird.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is difficult to believe what a lot of vermin and rodents a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much or more food than a dozen cats in a night. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their weight in food every night and more if they can get it. A case is on record in which a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight one right after another. The ninth followed all but the tail, which for some time hung out of the bird's mouth. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird what effect must a whole family of owls have on the rodents of a community?

Conversation of Bees.

In an article on bees and ants by Gaston Bouwer in the Revue Hebdomadaire the writer contends that these insects carry on conversation among themselves and that, while this is done by means of their feelers, they are not entirely dependent upon them "A whole colony," says Mr. Bouwer "in an anthouse or a beehive often responds instantaneously to a signal which may have been given without contact. It is interesting to see an ant laborer for whom a burden is too heavy go to a fellow, make a sign or give a certain touch with his feeler and then see the second insect join the first in lifting or moving the object."

If Things Were Reversed.

Moral: Respect the feelings of your horses and protect them from flies.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Strawberries.

There are three common methods of growing strawberries—in hills, in narrow matted rows or in wide matted rows. We prefer the second method Arrange the first strong runners by hand, spacing them properly and securing each one in place with a little soil or a small stone. Then, when each row is full, cut off the additional runners that may grow. Keep the ground hoed and cultivated until late fall. The finished row should not be wider than 15 or 18 inches.

Scours in Pigs.

The following remedy for scouring in pigs is recommended by a veterinary surgeon: Wash their feed troughs thoroughly with hot water and soap Rinse with cold water and then wash with soda and water. Do this every morning. Their milk should be kept as cool as possible and free from contaminating influences. Discontinue their run on grass. Put a little powdered sulphate copper in the water they drink—not over two or three grains to each pig.

Grass and Corn Crops.

Secretary Wilson says: "The greatest crop of America is grass, and then corn, Next after corn is probably cotton; then come wheat and poultry, running neck and neck. The product of the hen coop is now nearly as valuable as that of the wheat field."

The Honey Crop.

The annual honey crop of Maryland is 1,000,000 pounds, which is an average of only 20 pounds to each hive of bees. Prof. Thomas B. Symons of the Maryland Agricultural College believes that the average production of each swarm should be from 75 to 100 pounds.

Wealth of United States.

The wealth of the United States in 1850 was $7,000,000,000, speaking in round terms; in 1860, $16,000,000,000; in 1870, $30,000,000,000; in 1880, $43,500,000,000; in 1890, $65,000,000,000; in 1900, $88,500,000,000, and in 1904, $107,000,000,000.

The Age of Trees.

The pine reaches a maximum age of 700 years; the silver fir, 425; the larch, 275; the red beech, 245; the aspen, 210; the birch, 200; the ash, 170; the elder, 145, and the elm, 130.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Seafoam.

This is one of the most delicious of the new candies; it is also very easy to make. Dissolve two cupfuls of sugar in one-half cup of hot water, then add one-half cupful of table syrup and boil until a little dropped in cold water will harden. Have the whites of two eggs beaten very stiff, pour the boiling candy, a little at a time, over these, beating all the time. Add one cupful of nut meats minced very fine and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Beat until a little dropped on a plate will stand up in shape, then drop by spoonfuls on clean wrapping paper, from which they are easily removed when cold.

New England Pudding.

Mix together one cupful of pastry flour and one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder and sift them twice. Now cream together one-half cupful of sugar and one tablespoonful of butter and when they are smooth add one egg. Thin this mixture with one-half cupful of milk and season with one saltspoonful of salt. Make a cake batter by adding the flour and baking powder and turn into a rather deep oblong tin. Bake in a moderate oven for twenty-five minutes and serve hot with sauce.

Cocoanut Pie.

Heat four cupfuls of milk and add two cupfuls of grated fresh cocoanut and let heat for ten minutes. Cool and add four eggs well beaten with half a cupful of sugar. Roll one cracker very fine and pour into two paste-lined plates. Put a rounding teaspoonful of butter cut in bits on each and bake. Cover with a meringue made from the whites of two eggs beaten stiff with one-half cupful of powdered sugar and brown in the oven. Cool the pie before putting on the meringue.

Cream of Lettuce Soup.

Wash the lettuce carefully and while wet put into the inner vessel of a double boiler, having boiling water in the outer vessel. Cook until tender, then rub through a fine colander, return the puree thus produced to saucepan, add a pint of white stock, season to taste and thicken with a roux of butter and flour and when smooth and thick add a cup of cream or rich milk and stir until very hot; then serve.

Canned Succotash.

Cut the corn from the cob (not too ripe); mix as many beans with it as desired; pack tightly into glass cans pressing in with the small end of a potato masher until the milk runs over the top; seal tightly; put the cans in a vessel, cover with cold water and boil for five hours. Tighten the covers after boiling and place jars in cool dark storage till used.

Strawberry Sauce.

Into a cup of powdered sugar work a heaping tablespoonful of butter, or enough to make a soft cream. Work steadily until this point is reached Into this hard sauce stir a cupful of mashed berries with their juice. Beat very hard for several minutes before sending to the table.

Blackened Silver.

Dissolve one pound of hyposulphate of soda in just as much water as it will absorb and moisten the silver with this, leaving it on for a few minutes. Wash it off with warm water rinse in hot water and dry. If it is not then clean rub with whiting in the ordinary way.

Bread Sauce for Food.

Boil half an onion and a half cup of fine white bread crumbs in one pint of milk until the desired consistency Remove the onion without breaking it, add one tablespoonful of butter one-half teaspoonful of salt and a dash of white pepper.

Short Suggestions.

Liver is delicious cooked as follows Cut slashes in the liver and thread into them thin strips of bacon; season with salt, pepper and thyme and bake for an hour or so.

Green peppers are good served with boiled rice in the following fashion Cut them up and boil until tender Season them with salt, pepper and butter, and turn over the rice.

A good sandwich for summer teas is made of brown bread filled with a mixture of ripe currants and cream cheese. The juice is strained from the currants and mixed to a paste with the cheese.

It is better to have the ironing board hang than stand, for there is less danger of its cover becoming soiled. Drive a hook or staple in the smaller end of the board by means of which to hang it.

Cane sugar loses a great deal of its sweetness when boiled with fruit, and much more is required to produce the same results than would be the case were the sweetness added just as the fruit is taken from the fire.

To make a green mayonnaise for a vegetable salad, add scalded chopped parsley to ordinary salad dressing.

For afternoon tea toast seems to be better liked than almost anything else. It is thin and is cut in round or diamond-shaped pieces.

To freshen stale cake dip it for a second in cold milk and then rebake it in a rather cool oven. Cake that has been treated in this way will taste as if it had been newly baked and may be eaten by any one. Stale bread may be treated in the same way.

When you sprinkle clothes for ironing cover the basket with a big, heavy blanket and clothes will keep moist and not mildew or sour in the hottest weather. Place the basket in a cool place, especially if articles are sprinkled at night, to iron the next day.

FASHION HINTS

Something practical for tennis and all outing wear is shown in this little model, carried out in vivella flannel, which washes like a linen but does not shrink. It would be very neat. A button hole finish is used.

Too Good for This World.

Albert was a solemn-eyed, spiritual-looking child.

"Nurse," he said, one day, leaving his blocks and laying his hand gently on her knee, "nurse, is this God's day?"

"No, dear," said his nurse, "this is not Sunday. It is Thursday."

"I'm so sorry," he said, sadly, and went back to his blocks.

The next day and the next, in his serious manner he asked the same question, and the nurse tearfully said to the cook: "That child is too good for this world."

On Sunday the question was repeated, and the nurse, with a sob in her voice, said, "Yes, Lambie. This is God's day."

"Then where is the funny paper?" he demanded.—Success Magazine.

Languor, listlessness and dullness of spirits are often due to kidney disorders. Pain and weakness in the back, sides and hips, headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders are sure signs that the kidneys need immediate attention. Delay is dangerous. Mrs. John F. Riley, 520 Walnut St., Hamilton, Ohio, says: "Backache, headache and dizzy spells were the burden of my life for years. Housework was drudgery, and I was tired and worn out all the time, due to kidney disease. Doan's Kidney Pills brought prompt relief and soon I was entirely cured."

Why Scotsmen Wear Kilts.

A. J. Drexel brings from his Scottish estate a story of a Highlander.

"There was a well known American writer," he said at a dinner, "who automobiled through Scotland, and at a hotel in the Highlands was treated with the greatest incivility.

"Accordingly he complained to the manager.

"'And I complain in particular,' he said, 'about my waiter in the dining room. The inattention and insolence of this man are insupportable.'

"The manager sought out the waiter, a raw-boned Highlander.

"'Dugald,' he said, 'the American visitor accuses you of inattention and insolence. What have you to say?'

"Dugald snorted and hotly replied: "'It's no' to be expeckit that a self-respectin' Scot could wait on him wi' civeelity. Wasna it he that said we took to the kilt because our feet were too large to get through trousers?'"

All Alike.

"The late Ethan Allen Hitchcock," said a Washington diplomat, "had a trenchant, outspoken way with him. Once, at a reception, I heard an inventor describing in his presence a new kind of warship.

"'This ship of mine,' the inventor said, 'is modeled on the duck.'

"'It flies, eh?' said Mr. Hitchcock.

"'No, no; of course it doesn't fly,' said the inventor, impatiently. 'It isn't an aeroplane. It's a ship. But it gets over the water like a duck.'

"'Suppose an enemy fires at it?' said Mr. Hitchcock.

"'Then it dives like a duck,' replied the inventor.

"'Right out of sight?' said Mr. Hitchcock.

"'Right down to the bottom,' said the inventor, proudly.

"'Humph,' said Mr. Hitchcock. 'Seems a good deal like those we have already, doesn't it?'"

The Woman Not to Marry.

The woman who proudly declares that she cannot hem a pocket handkerchief, never made up a bed in her life, and adds with a simper that she has "been in society ever since she was 15."

The woman who would rather nurse a pug dog than a baby.

The woman who thinks that men are angels.

The woman who would rather die than wear a hat two seasons old.

The woman who thinks that the cook and nurse can keep house.

The woman who expects a declaration of love three times a day.

The woman who buys ornaments for the drawing-room and borrows kitchen utensils from her neighbors; and who thinks table decorations are of more importance than good food.

The woman who wants things just because "other women" have them.

The Odor of Sanctity.

Americans, having at home little that is really ancient, are apt to reverence antiquity abroad. The wonder of the average tourist from "the States" in the presence of the ruins of Europe is familiar to the foreigner, and a phlegmatic visitor is rather a relief.

A gentleman resident for some years in Rome, says a writer in the Philadelphia Record, relates that he has found but one such traveler.

"He is a Southerner, and I gave a day to showing him about. The first church we visited was, I think, the Ara Coeli, on the Capitoline hill.

"'This church,' I said, 'is about a thousand years old.'

"'Humph!' said he. 'It smells a lot older!'"

A Base Trick.

It often happens that the easiest way to do a thing is the wrong way, maintains a writer in the Washington Star. The story is told of a man who had great difficulty in spelling words that had "ei" and "ie" in them. One day a friend offered to give him an infallible rule for such cases.

"It is a rule," he said, "that in forty-seven years has never failed me."

His friend expressed his delight and waited. The man resumed:

"The rule is simply this: Write your 'i' and 'e' exactly alike, and put your dot exactly between them."

It's Fruity Flavor.

"Old boy, that oration of yours was a peach."

"It wasn't so bad. I had—er—pruned it down till it was just about the right size."

When We Tackle It in Earnest.

"I have read," said the visiting foreigner, "that when you celebrate your Fourth of July in this country the destruction of life and property in appalling. Don't the people take any interest in bringing about a reform in the manner of observing the day?"

"O, yes," said the native; "we begin a crusade for a safe and sane Fourth the next day after the celebration, and sometimes we keep it up for three or four weeks."

"No, sir," answered the guest, who had arrived the day before. "I hope I didn't disturb you last night, but the fact is I've been a country doctor for thirty years, and I'm so used to being called up two or three times during the night that unless I get out of bed and walk around once in a while I don't get any sleep."

Room for Hope.

Mrs. Smith—Oh, doctor, my husband is very bad. Do you really think that there is any chance for him after this?

Doctor—I certainly think so, madam. After this morning I shall only call once a day instead of twice.—Jugend.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about the cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER"—with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. The question of an income tax is to be put up to the people. The common understanding is that an income tax is unconstitutional, but it is proposed to have the constitution amended so that an income tax law can be enacted that will not be in conflict with the constitution. An income tax is not like an ordinary tax, for the reason that it does not apply to all incomes, but to such incomes only as exceed certain sums. Not one man in a thousand would be subject to the tax, and for that reason it is believed that the desired constitutional amendment will be favored by the voters. It will be necessary for three-fourths of the states in the union to support the amendment and it is believed that number will do so with a rush. The opposition to the proposed tax is confined largely to the well-to do and those who would be caught by such a tax. It would not include very many residents of this county, but would take in a few men in the larger cities of the state.

Speaking about booming towns the Hillsdale Standard Herald has the following to say. It would be worth the time of every solitary citizen of Butler to read it over carefully and then read it over again. In fact you cannot read it too much or think about it too often. If we want to boom Butler we will simply have to stick together and work as a unit for every improvement or advance that is made: The matter of booming a town is very simple. The chief difficulty in town booming is due to the general inability of getting people to stick together. The rapid growth of western cities is due to two things. First, the inhabitants stand together to the last man and to the last ditch. The knockers are knocked out. The kickers are kicked out. That is to say there is so much enthusiam for each particular step forward that is being made that the kickers and the knockers are completely swamped. They can't make themselves heard, and even if they could nobody would listen to them. Second, these western people are not afraid to put up their money. They are made up largely of hustlers who have become tired of conservative eastern methods and have gone west to get into the swing where town booming and other things are done by wholesale for the city or the county as the case may be.

WILL BE A CANDIDATE

Next Year, Decides Representative E. M. McKennan

Edward M. McKennan of this city, DeKalb's representative in the last general assembly, will be a candidate before the democratic primaries next year to succeed himself.

This he decided last week after a visit on Thursday to Indianapolis. He went on legal business with Governor Marshall and incidentally politics in DeKalb was discussed. The governor inquired if Mr. McKennan would be a candidate next year to return to the legislature. Mr. McKennan explained what he termed conditions to make such a candidacy inadvisable. Mr. Marshall, however, insisted that it is impossible to please every constituent and that he wanted Mr. McKennan to be a member of the next assembly. Mr. McKennan also talked with other democratic leaders in the capital city and decided upon his return home that if no untoward circumstances arise he will seek the nomination next year.

Mr. McKennan in the last legislature planned the coup whereby a project of the republicans to hold up the appropriation bill and necessitate a special session was defeated and he did a great deal of other work that pleased and benefited his constituents. In the county he has been so highly commended that he has confidence in his candidacy next year.—Garrett Clipper.

A. P. Moste, formerly councilman at Garrett, and resident agent of the Centlivre Brewing Co., in that city, against whom the grand jury at the March term of the DeKalb circuit court returned five indictments for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, appeared before Judge Bratton in the circuit court Tuesday morning and entered pleas of not guilty in each case. He gave bond for his appearance when the cases were called for trial, which will be some some time in August, probably. Immediately after the indictments were returned Mr. Moste left Garrett for Chicago, where he has since been engaged in business, and warrants were not served on him. He returned to Garrett Monday and voluntarily came to Auburn to enter his pleas in the cases and gave bond for his appearance when the cases were called.

The remedy is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. Epilepsy, Fits

"My son was cured of a very bad case of epilepsy with Dr. Miles' Nervine."
MRS. D. BAKER, Cleveland, O.

"My little daughter who was afflicted with St. Vitus' Dance is now entirely well after taking Dr. Miles' Nervine only four months."
MRS. C. G. BENNETT, Alma, Mich.

Epilepsy, Fits, St. Vitus' Dance and Spasms, are all nervous diseases. They have been cured in so many instances with Dr. Miles' Nervine that it is reasonable to conclude that it is almost sure to cure you. With nervous diseases of a severe type, persistent use has almost invariably resulted in a complete cure or lasting benefits, worth many times the cost of the remedy. The best evidence you can get of its merits is to write to those who have used it. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

which give you such exquisite suffering, every month, are caused, as you know, by female trouble. Relief seldom or never comes of itself. It is necessary to cure the cause, in order to stop the pains, and this can only be done if you will take a specific, female remedy, that acts directly on the womanly organs.

Butler's Interests Will Be Looked After---No Change in the Politics

In taking over the ownership of the DeKalb County Herald the writer does so with much pleasure and pleasant anticipation, not however overlooking the responsibility connected therewith. For the past fifteen years the HERALD has been edited by able and competent men, and it is our aim to keep it up to the present high standard that the retiring editor, Mr. W. O. Kenan, has placed it. To do this will require a strong effort on our part and the co-operation of the citizens of Butler. Mr Kenan has turned over to us the best list of subscribers that has ever been our lot to look upon, but improvement shall be our motto and we expect to put forth every effort to further improve the list.

The HERALD has always been progressive and has lead in every movement for a greater Butler, and it will continue to stand for the best interests of Butler and its surrounding community. The writer has always taken the keenest interest in Butler, and during the five years that we have been away from her pleasant and genial people, we have watched with pride every advancement of our old home, sharing in the blessings and sorrowing in the misfortunes of our former associates as we would see them recorded in the paper or hear from an old-time friend. It is gratifying also to meet so many of the business men whom we dealt with and whom we have always held in the highest esteem. We trust that our relations with these men, many of whom have lent us uncalculable assistance, will be as pleasant in the future as they have in the days gone by; and that we may be able, ere long, to count every newly established business man in Butler, in the same class with these other gentlemen.

Editorially and politically the writer will have full charge, as well as the other branches of the business. The politics will remain DEMOCRATIC and the furtherance of the party will be looked after to the best of our ability. And to head off any one who may question the sincerity of this statement, we will say that our vote cast last fall was straight democratic, and while no one will receive abuse from these columns, democrat or republican, independent or otherwise, in time of campaign or out, we do not hesitate to pledge our support to the democratic party.

In conclusion we want to ask the support and co-operation of every person in Butler, regardless of politics or creed. Sincerely hoping that we may meet the demands of the people, we are Very truly,

A. S. POWERS.

Our Farewell

With this issue Mr. A. S. Powers takes possession of the HERALD. The writer has lived in Butler four years and six months, nearly every day of that time having been profitable to him. The HERALD was purchased at a time when the business and equipment was at its worst, in fact almost an entire wreck. We have placed the paper on a paying basis and so far improved the plant that today no office in Northern Indiana can boast of a better equipment or more satisfactory patronage. The list of subscribers is a splendid one, and we feel assured that Mr. Powers, who is so well and favorably known to all people in this section, will carry on the business even more satisfactory to his many patrons and more financially successful to himself.

The HERALD has always been strongly allied with the democratic party, and under the new management we are sure the party's interests will not suffer, but rather be strengthened and enlarged.

All accounts for job printing and advertising up to Saturday, July 17, 1909, are due and must be paid to W. O. Kenan. All subscription accounts must be paid to Mr. Powers.

In parting we wish to say that we are turning over a nice clean business to our successor, and we wish to thank the many staunch, loyal friends of the HERALD for their support and encouragement in the years that we have been in Butler. We fully appreciate all the kindness and courtesies extended us. Any person having an account against us can get their money by presenting bill for same.

As yet we have not decided what we shall do or where we will locate, but will remain in Butler for at least two months and hope to be of material assistance to our successor, who has treated us with splendid courtesy and consideration.

Stand by the HERALD. Patronize its advertising columns and its job department. It will be your friend in the way of bringing you a large return on the money you invest with it.

Yours truly,
W. O. KENAN.

Preparations are going on apace for a big series of religious meetings in Kendallville during September.

BUTLER IS ADVANCING

Many Substantial Improvements Are Being Made

That Butler is coming to the front is no prophecy—it is plain to be seen that business in every avenue is growing better as the days pass by—our merchants are not slow to see the growth that is taking place and they are encouraged at the outlook for the future and are doing everything possible to keep up the movement for a better town. Strangers notice the unusual amount of activity for this time of the year, and the number of beautiful homes is increasing rapidly. Rentals are high and every house that is fit to be occupied has a tenant.

Oh well, some may say, what is the cause of the improvement, and will it continue. We say yes, Butler will continue to improve, not by bounds or leaps like the mushroom, but she will have a steady growth and will be one of the best towns in northern Indiana.

Among the improvements which is deserving of especial mention is the two-story brick building which is now under construction for the Oberlin Grocery Company It will be modern in every respect and will add greatly to the appearance of our city, and the HERALD wishes to congratulate this company upon the enterprising spirit which they have always shown.

Another indication of prosperity is the fact that we have two good banks, sound as the rock of Gibralter, and both institutions making good.

Butler has never been boosted like our neighboring cities, but she has continued to grow nevertheless. The excellent shipping facilities, the growth of her two factories, viz., the Butler Co. and the Butler Basket Co., these alone insure a better town. The Butler Co. is doubling its output every year and their products go to every part of the earth. The Basket Co. is under the supervision of careful and competent hands, and their output has grown of late until a new addition to their large factory will soon be constructed, so we are informed by the superintendent, Mr. M. Brunstetter.

Now then, friends, you who have never boosted, boost—if you cannot boost, in the name of heaven don't knock. Let us have a city here; there ought to be and there can be. Will you assist?

A. U. VERNIER BUYS LAUNDRY

Byron Ginder has sold the Butler laundry to A. U. Vernier, Mr. Vernier taking possession Monday morning. The laundry is being completely overhauled and considerable new machinery will be installed, among which is an ironer of the latest type guaranteed to do the work without stretching collars and does much better work than the old machines.

Mr. Vernier needs no introduction to Butler people. They know well his qualifications for turning out good work, as he has been in the business here before and pleased his patrons.

He expects to establish agents in several small towns and will no doubt work up a large business. We feel sure that the interest of his patrons will be well looked after.

Mr. Ginder does not know at present where he will locate, but will probably remain in Butler for sometime, at least until a suitable location can be found.

OHIO MAN A SUICIDE LIFE WAS A FAILURE

William J. Hobeck, of Eaglesport, Morgan county, Ohio, shot himself through the brain last Sunday afternoon at 2:05 oclock, while alone in the men's waiting room of the Pennsylvania station at Columbia City. Death was instantaneous. Isaac Campbell, watchman at the railroad crossing twenty rods west of the station, heard the shot and ran to the depot where he saw what had occurred and immediately notified Telegrapher Will Herrold, who was at his home near by. Campbell and Herrold hurried to the scene and the latter, seeing that the man was dead, telephoned to coroner Dr. J. H. Briggs, at Churubusco, for instructions. Dr. Briggs replied that the body should be left as it had fallen and nothing about the premises should be disturbed until he should arrive, which he did an hour later, in his automobile. The waiting room was then locked until the arrival of the coroner, who made an examination and held an informal inquest. He will report that the deceased came to his death by suicide, due to temporary insanity or chronic melancholia.

No one was in either waiting room or in the operator's room at the depot when the tragedy occurred, as Columbia City has no Sunday telegraph service and the few passenger trains on Sunday do not require the presence of the agent except at certain hours. After the coroner had completed his inquest the body was taken in charge by the Helfrich & Warren undertaking firm and conveyed to their morgue where the remains were prepared for burial or shipment.

If you have pains in the back, weak back, or any other indication of a weakened or disordered condition of the kidneys or bladder, you should get DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills right away when you experience the least sign of kidney or bladder complaints, but be sure that you get DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills. We know what they will do for you, and if you will send your name to E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago, you will receive a free trial box of these kidney and bladder pills. They are sold here by Geo. W. TWO INSANE BROTHERS

John and Ernest Gunsenhouser Taken Into Custody by the Sheriff

Sheriff Ralph Thomas and his deputy, John Hoff, went out into Wilmington township, Friday forenoon, and took into custody John and Ernest Gunsenhouser, two brothers, who exhibited evidence of insanity, and brought them to this city, placing them in the county jail.

The two men are unmarried and live with their father, Henry Gunsenhouser, on the farm. Lately their minds have become unbalanced and they were violent in their actions, threatening to kill various persons, among whom was their brother.

Friday forenoon their actions became of such a violent and threatening character that the sheriff was telephoned for. At first Deputy Sheriff Hoff went out to the Gunsenhouser home alone, supposing there was but one insane man, but when he got there he found there were two. Then he sent for Sheriff Thomas, who went out in an automobile. The two insane men were brought to Auburn in the automobile.

During the afternoon an examination into their mental condition was made by physicians and Justice of the Peace Green.—Auburn Courier.

T. & C. Men On a Strike

With the completion of their runs Sunday night all the motormen and conductors of the road, twenty in number, went on a strike for an increase in wages. They have been getting 17 and 20 cents an hour. They asked for an increase of three cents an hour, a raise to 20 and 30 cents.

This increase in wages the men determined on asking at a meeting previously held and Sunday evening a committee waited on Manager Purinton at the general offices of the company in Kendallville. He told them that he could not grant it without consulting with the receiver of the road, Mr. Mortimer, who lives in the east, and a meeting of the officials held.

It was then that the men determined to go out on a strike, and on Monday not one of the twenty motormen and conductors reported for duty. As a consequence no cars, passenger or express could be run out.

This suspension of business on account of cars not running was a serious inconvenience to many people who had arranged for leaving the city or coming here, and the same inconvenience existed at all the points along the line. It also piled freight and express matter up at the stations.

ManZan is for piles. It is today the one known remedy that will positively act, and completely too, on any and all of the many different kinds of this annoying, frequent and often dangerous complaint. ManZan cures piles. It is applied by means of a tube with nozzle attached. It allays inflammation quickly. Sold by Geo. W. Geddes. 23-3m

Letter From Butler Boy

Seattle, Wash., July 11, 1909.

DEAR MOTHER AND ALL:

I received your most welcome and loving letter sometime ago and was glad to hear from you. I am well and hope everybody is the same. I hope James is better.

I met Milo the first day I was ashore. He is well. We have been out to the exposition twice together. He certainly was glad to see me and has entertained me royally while here.

I have spent the greatest part of my time the last week with that famous Iola team of Dayton, Ohio. They are the degree team of the K. of P. Some of them came over to the ship and I showed them around, then they invited me ashore with them. They are a fine crowd of fellows and we had some good old times together. They left Saturday for Denver enoute home. The exposition is great. They have the most beautiful grounds I ever saw. It is a natural park and belongs to the state university.

We leave here in the morning for two weeks torpedo practice in the sound. After that we go to Sitka, Alaska, for three weeks and then down south again. That was too bad about Will Devore. Give him my regards.

Well mamma, as the mail is just leaving the ship I must close, hoping an early reply. Love to all.

Your son.
ARTHUR LATSON.

A Unique Sermon

"The Ideal Young Woman," was the subject of a sermon in the interests of the young people delivered last Sunday evening at the Church of Christ. S. B. Braden, the minister, pursued the same method of sermon preparation as when the "Ideal Young Man" was considered. Several of the young men of Butler submitted opinions on the subject. These were read at the service before the sermon. The following is a summary of what some of the young men of Butler consider as constituting an Ideal Young Woman:

Not the "fellow-struck" kind.

One who has the knack of economy.

If she is a Christian. One whose religious life is full and healthy and not full of compromises.

One who by her choice of associates shows that she has due regard for the company of those whose lives are above suspicion.

The one who cultivates sympathy and unselfishness at the expense of haughtiness, snubbery, fickleness and vanity.

One who strives to be competent to fill that sphere of human activity where the gentler sex are supreme—the home.

Not the one who deliberately permits her old mother to be the kitchen slave and household drudge while she primps and frizzes and promenades the streets

One who ignores gossip and small talk, for no girl has the good will and fast friendship of either young men or woman who is ever delving into the petty slanders of the community.

Not the young woman who adheres to deceptive makeups—paint, powder, inverted coal-hod hats bespangled with garden truck and a coiffure whose dimensions and falseness bespeak positive vulgarity will be tolerated.

Congratulatory

Churubusco, Ind., July 19, 1909.

DEAR ARTHUR:

Congratulations upon your new investment and your entry into the grand old party of the common people. I am very glad to see the old reliable in the hands of such a good hustler as yourself and I predict that you will give the people of Butler a newspaper that they can be proud of. I am fully aware of your hustling qualities and I shall watch your progress with a great deal of pleasure and self gratification. I wish you would convey my best wishes to Mrs. P. as well as to any other friends who might inquire about me. Had a good visit with George a few nights ago.

Yours as ever,
O. H. DOWNEY.

Excursion Sloop Lost.

Ten persons were drowned, two of them little girls, when the excursion sloop Roxana, carrying twenty-two passengers, was capsized by a sudden squall in lower New York Bay. The captain of the Roxana and the twelve survivors were picked up under great difficulties in a rough and choppy sea by the tug Lamont. The Roxana with her skipper, Captain Samuelson, was chartered at Ulmer Beach, Brooklyn, by a party from Brooklyn for a sail across the bay to Midland Beach, Staten Island, and back. The first leg of the voyage was made without mishap and all hands piled ashore to make merry. Beer was served and some of the survivors could give but a hazy account of the accident.

Latham's Machine Drops Into Sea.

Herbert Latham, the French aviator, made a daring but unsuccessful attempt to cross the English channel in his monoplane. He got away splendidly under perfect conditions from the top of the chalk cliff at Sangatte and had covered over half the distance at an average height of five hundred feet when the motor slowed down and he was obliged to descend. The air space of the wings, however, kept the machine afloat and the monoplane, lying like a wounded bird, was stretched out on the water when the French torpedo boat destroyer Harpon, which had kept abreast throughout the journey, came alongside and picked up the aviator.

Means, of Columbus, Ohio, was instantly killed and several other occupants hurt when Dr. Means' automobile was wrecked just outside the city of Bucyrus, when the auto struck a rut and wrecked a wheel and was landed in the ditch. The daughter was thrown upon the pike and her skull crushed. Mrs. Means was badly bruised. The governess, Mrs. May Lovell, had an arm broken. The driver, John Wade, negro, was unhurt.

One Man Killed and Five Injured.

Theodore Gullow, of Monroeville, Ohio, was killed and five men were injured in the wreck of Wheeling & Lake Erie passenger train No. 5 at Trowbridge, sixteen miles east of Toledo, Ohio. The train jumped the track within forty rods of the station while making forty miles an hour on a straight track. The engine and combination coach went into the ditch and the three other cars left the track.

TARIFF MUST BE LOWER IS TAFT'S ULTIMATUM

President Tells Standpatters He Intends to See That Downward Revision Wins.

STATEMENT AS THREAT OF VETO

Executive Meets Arguments of Congressmen by Declaring Party Pledges Shall Be Kept.

President Taft clarified the tariff situation Friday by issuing his first formal statement on the subject. This statement, made after a conference with twenty-two Republican and one Democratic representative who demanded a high protective tariff, follows:

"Mr. Young of Michigan opposed free ore; Mr. Mondell opposed free coal or reciprocity with Canada and free hides; each on the ground that the policy would injure the interests in his State, and a discussion was participated in by other representatives, who urged that the doctrine of free raw materials was not a Republican doctrine.

"The President replied that he was not committed to the principle of free raw materials, but that he was committed to the principle of a downward revision of the tariff which he had promised, and that he was obliged to look at the matter not from the standpoint of any particular district, but from the standpoint of the whole country, and also from the standpoint of responsibility for the entire Republican party.

"He said the question in each case was a question of fact, to be determined by evidence, as to whether the present duty was needed for protection or whether the rates was excessive, so that a downward revision, or putting the article on the free list, would not injure the industry.

Taft Defines the Issues.

"He repeated the platform of the Republican party and said that he had always understood that it meant a downward revision in many instances, though perhaps in some few instances an increase might be needed; that he reached this construction of the platform on what he understood to be the principle of protection and its justification—namely, that after an industry was protected by a duty equal to the difference between the cost of production in this country, including a fair profit to the manufacturer, the energy and enterprise of American business men and capitalists, the effectiveness of American labor and the ingenuity of American inventors under the impulse of competition behind the tariff wall would reduce the cost of production, and that, with the reduction in the cost of production, the tariff rate would become unnecessarily high and ought to be reduced.

"This was the normal operation of the tariff as claimed by the defenders of the protective system—not in every case, but as a general rule—that of course a revision of the tariff could not be perfect, must have defects and inconsistencies, but in so far as his influence went when called upon to act in connection with legislation it would be thrown in the direction of performing the promises of the party as he understood them; and that if iron ore and oil and coal and hides did not need protection and the conditions were such as to enable the ore producers and the oil producers and the coal producers and the producers of hides to compete successfully, without reduction of wages, with the producers from abroad, then they did not need a duty and their articles should go on the free list.

"It was a question of fact which he hoped to make up his mind with respect to, on such evidence as was available to him in order to carry out what he understood to be the promises of the party to the whole people. He said he felt that his position as the titular head of the Republican party and as President, with the whole people as his constituency, gave him a somewhat broader point of view than that of a single member of Congress in respect to articles produced in his district. He felt strongly the call of the country for a downward revision within the limitations of the protective principle, and he hoped to be able to respond to that call as he heard it, as well in the interests of the party as of the country."

LAND FILING IN WASHINGTON.

200,000 Applications Expected for 3 Indian Reservations in West.

Twenty-five thousand men and women are expected to file applications for lands in the Coeur d'Alene, Spokane and Flathead Indian reservations. In Spokane alone 7,000 applications are expected, while the list at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, may exceed that number. It is estimated that 100,000 men and women will file for lands, many applying for all three reservations, making a grand total of 200,000 applications by August 5. From 15,000 to 20,000 applications from veteran soldiers and sailors are expected. It is believed that one applicant in fifteen will be able to secure a homestead worth taking up.

BREAK COL. SNELL'S WILL.

Jurors for Second Time Set Aside Last Testament of Millionaire.

The third contest over the will of Col. Thomas Snell, of Clinton, Ill., the eccentric old man who died leaving an estate of $2,000,000 and cutting his only son off with an annuity of $50, was ended Friday when a jury decided that Col. Snell was insane at the time he made the will. This decision sets aside the bequest of several thousand dollars to Mabelle Snell McNamara, the aged colonel's affinity. The jury was out a little more than an hour and took but one ballot, which resulted eleven to one for the contesting son, Richard Snell. The dissenting juror changed his vote without the formality of a second ballot.

The first trial of the contest resulted in a verdict that Col. Snell was insane, but a higher court set aside the verdict and remanded the case for another trial. If the will had stood the legal heirs would have received, all told, annuities aggregating $5,000, and not exceeding $1,000 in any single case, while the residue of the fortune would have been held in a weird trust agreement for heirs yet unborn. On the date set for a final distribution, in the terms of the will, the estate would have grown probably to $100,000,000.

The Snell will case will go down in American court annals as furnishing one of the most amazing instances of the depths to which women have descended to gain money. The most sensational feature of all three hearings of the case was the introduction of letters from nearly a score of women, young and old, all of whom professed to love the aged millionaire madly. To cater to a degenerate tendency which appeared to be one of Col. Snell's senile vagaries, the women interlarded their letters with unprintable obscenities. The more vulgar the tone of the letters the better pleased the old man appeared to be, and it was found when the letters were exposed that he had formed the habit of marking them with his impressions. Scarcely a letter was written to the doting old man by any of the women which did not demand gifts and money.

BIG COUNTERFEITING PLOT.

Secret Service Men Say Gang Has Operated for Years.

What the secret officers declare is an international counterfeiting plot with agents throughout Italy and the United States was revealed the other day when operatives arrested two Italian women and two Italian men in Chicago. A fifth arrest is expected. The officers refuse to divulge the names of the prisoners. According to the secret service men the gang has been operating in this country for four years. The plant where the counterfeits are made is in Italy, they declare, and is under the eye of the Italian police. The operatives say thousands of dollars of bogus $5 and $10 silver certificates have been passed which were so well made that even experts had difficulty in detecting them. Secret Service Officer Ritchie recently located members of the gang at Warren, Mass., it is said, but made no arrests, hoping by following them to locate the plant. The Italian police later discovered the plant in Italy.

RICH WOMAN A SMUGGLER?

Indictment Returned Against Mrs. Fremont B. Chesbrough.

An indictment for smuggling was handed down by the federal grand jury in New York against Mrs. Fremont B. Chesbrough of Detroit, owner of the Chesbrough coastwise line of steamers running out of Boston. The true bill was due to the discovery of a double bottom in one of the trunks which Mrs. Chesbrough brought to this country with her on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. last May. Wearing apparel appraised at several thousand dollars was found in this hidden compartment. A $23,000 necklace was turned over to the customs officials by Mrs. Chesbrough's attorney. The woman is ill in a sanitarium.

BIG ARMY ON STRIKE AS INDUSTRY REVIVES

Twenty to Thirty Thousand Men in Pittsburg District Quit Work as Resumption Comes.

MINE AND MILL ARE CRIPPLED

Disorders at McKee's Rocks Quelled by State Police After Thirty Men Are Injured.

Between 25,000 and 30,000 workmen—coal miners, tin and sheet plate workers and members of various steel crafts—are on strike in western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio and West Virginia. A majority of the idle men are in the Pittsburg district. Except the strike at the plant of the Pressed Steel Car Company at McKee's Rock, where rioting resulted in the shooting and beating of thirty persons, the strikes are orderly.

The conflict between capital and labor in the Pittsburg district is unique, coming, as it does, at a time of returning prosperity. Resumptions have been ordered in all trades, and men who have been without work for many months are being afforded employment. On the other hand is the present unrest of the workmen. Solutions of the causes leading up to the strikes are varied. In several instances the men claim that their employers, taking advantage of their recent prolonged idleness, are offering them low wages for their work. The officials assert conditions do not warrant higher remuneration at this time. Other grievances are the alleged violation of the eight-hour workday, recognition of organized labor, a controversy over the use of so-called "safety" powder for coal mine blasting and better working conditions generally. In the strike of the United Mine Workers against the Pittsburg Coal Company over 14,000 miners employed in the mines in the Pittsburg district are out. The men claim various violations of their working agreement.

Steel workers, unorganized, to the number of about 3,500, are in conflict with the Pressed Steel Car Company. The men say the wages paid are too low. Rioting and bloodshed has resulted during this strike, and further trouble is feared. The Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers is engaged in a strike against the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation. Over 7,000 men, it is estimated, are out. The trouble is over the "open-shop" policy recently declared by the company. Three thousand members of the Tin Plate Workers' Association employed by the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company at New Castle quit work to-day. The wage scale expires at midnight and the men will join the strike of the Amalgamated Association. It is said that the tin plate workers' strike will affect plants in different portions of the country, adding from 5,000 to 10,000 to the ranks of the strikers. The trouble is spreading to the independent sheet and tin plate plants, and from present indications there is apparently no hope or effort toward an adjustment.

SEVEN KILLED AND 24 HURT.

Hundreds of Pedestrians Have Narrow Escapes When Building Falls.

In one of the busiest sections of Philadelphia and at a time when thousands of pedestrians were passing, the five-story brick building at the northeast corner of 11th and Market streets, which was being reconstructed for the United Gas Improvement Company, collapsed with a terrific roar early Thursday afternoon, burying or pinning beneath the ruins thirty-two persons, seven of whom are dead, one missing, one fatally injured and twenty-four more or less seriously injured. Those killed were workmen employed by Sax & Abbott, contractors. The two lower floors of the building had been torn out and the three floors were shored up by heavy timbers. Steel girders were bracing the shoring. It is supposed that by moving one of the girders the entire structure was loosened.

NEBRASKA ELECTION LAW VOID

Superior Court at Lincoln Gives Decision in Test Case.

In Lincoln, Neb., the Superior Court handed down a decision declaring the Donohoe nonpartisan judiciary election law invalid. Te decree says: "The majority of the court holding that the act is void, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed." This means that the election of judges of the Supreme Court, District courts, regents of the State University, county judges, and county superintendents by use of a separate ballot, cannot take place. The old law will continue to hold. The chief objection of the court was to the provision requiring that for 1,000 names to be on a petition for judge, not more than 500 of which could come from one county. They declared that it was a hindrance to the free exercise of the franchise, and was repugnant to the constitution of the State. Four of the six members sitting believed this provision formed the chief reason for the passage, and thus invalidated the whole act. The entire court declared the provision denying the right of party conventions to indorse candidates for the offices affected by the act was without force and void.

SAFE-CRACKERS ROB POSTOFFICE

Huntley, Ill., Strong Box Looted of $500 in Cash and Stamps.

Safe-crackers blew open the safe of the postoffice at Huntley, Ill., on the Northwestern railroad, some time in the night and escaped with about $500 in money and stamps. The robbery was a daring one, the interior of the store being wrecked by the force of the explosion. Postmaster E. H. Cook, of Huntley, was the first to discover the theft when he went to his drug store in the morning. The postoffice was located in the back of the store and the robbers had been thorough in their work of looting. No one, apparently, heard the sound of the explosion and the men worked with little fear of discovery. The robbers stole a horse from the barn of John Kelly and drove about three miles east, where they tied the animal. No further trace of them was found.

A box car in the yards of the M. P. & G. Ry. was blown against the passenger coaches, rolling the train a hundred yards. Several localities report serious injury to the corn crop.

It was reported that he committed suicide because of an unfortunate love affair. Baron Oskar was 21 years old. They say his death was caused by apoplexy.

INROADS OF THE BIG MAIL ORDER HOUSES

Merchandise Sold in This Way Said to Aggregate $500,000,000 Yearly.

INDUSTRY CENTERS IN CHICAGO

Thousands of Country Merchants and Manufacturers in Middle West Organize to Fight System.

There is to be war to the knife between the country stores in the Middle West and the owners of the "mail order business," which is centered in Chicago, and the battle will be a battle of giants. The mail order business has become a tremendous institution. In Chicago two of these houses do a business aggregating $20,000,000 a year and it is said that the total of merchandise sold by mail in the United States yearly amounts to $500,000,000.

Chicago is the great center of this huge commercial industry. From that city the catalogues of the mail order houses go to every corner of rural America. There is hardly a farmhouse or a woodchopper's cabin, no matter how remote, where you will not find one. These catalogues are bulky tomes, almost as big as a family Bible. They weigh about five pounds apiece and cost their sponsors from 36 to 40 cents each for postage. One house sends out 600,000 of them every year, and the other a few thousand less. The expense of preparation and printing is more than a million dollars for each.

Organize for Protection.

The mail order houses have almost ruined the business of a good many manufacturers and country merchants, and these manufacturers and country merchants are eager to take advantage of anything that will give them a chance to fight back. And that opportunity came with the formation of an enterprise, which is organized more for the benefit of the small dealer and the consumer than it is for purely gainful ends. Already it has enrolled on its side 6,000 country merchants and many manufacturers, some of whom had grievances against the mail order houses. The latter buy tremendous quantities of goods from manufacturers at very low prices. The first year the contract is made the manufacturer is happy and indulges in golden dreams. The next year the mail order house comes along and makes a yet bigger contract, but at a lower figure. In order to cheapen the cost of production the manufacturer enlarges his plant, puts in more machinery and greater capital in his business with the expectation that his orders from the mail order house will continue to expand year by year. It is then that the mail order concern gets the manufacturer in its power. It comes forward the third year with an offer for a still greater quantity of his product, but at prices that are about equal to cost of production, or at least so near it as to leave no margin for risk or profit. If the manufacturer refuses the offer the order is placed elsewhere and the manufacturer has to face the prospect of ruin owing to his having a plant that is too large for his normal trade and which will "eat its head off" if not run to its fullest capacity. In most cases, too, the additions to the plant have been made wth borrowed money. The result is that the manufacturer either has to go into bankruptcy or accept the mail order concern's terms, which practically make him its servant to the end of the chapter.

How the Association Works.

Driven to desperation a year or so ago some of these manufacturers and some of the smaller merchants in the west got together and after expressing their indignation at the big mail order houses formed an association with its headquarters in Sioux City. The plan of procedure is simple. Certain special articles that have been handled by the mail order houses in enormous quantities are selected. They generally are staple goods for which there is a steady demand. The small storekeepers combine their orders, in this way making them mount up to a huge aggregate. The manufacturers belonging to the association are thus able to produce the goods and place them on the small merchants' shelves at prices lower than the mail order people can afford to sell them, but at a living profit to themselves. As the merchants and manufacturers connected with the association advertise in their local papers, the enterprise is having the solid support of the latter.

The result has been to cut down very appreciably the volume of business done by the Chicago concerns and all over the Middle West merchants are joining the association at the rate of 10 a day, or 300 a month.

Mauretania's Latest.

The Cunard liner Mauretania, which arrived at New York Friday, scored the new mark for the western voyage of four days, sixteen hours and thirty-six minutes.

Workers Shunning Hawaii.

Officials of the Department of Commerce and Labor have reached the conviction that the unemployed are not so anxious to work that they will endure conditions of labor in the plantations of Hawaii. This appears to be borne out by the report of a territorial commission which has been visiting our larger cities in an effort to engage farm laborers. Finally a band of men, willing to accept the jobs was got together in New York and put aboard a train for San Francisco, but when the train got there only three of the recruits was on it.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The usual indices of trade activity continue to reflect accumulating strength and better disposition toward increasing active capacity in manufactures. Weather conditions favor the growing crops and marketings of farm products are well sustained, those of live stock showing considerable increase. The markets for breadstuffs remain quiet, but packing is more extended, and there is good absorption of provisions for both domestic and export consumption. High temperatures stimulated demand for seasonable needs in the leading retail lines and there is ample reduction of merchandise stocks here and at interior points.

Wholesale trade in the principal staples promises to show expansion. Buyers come forward in large numbers, and the demand is strong in textiles, clothing, footwear, fod products and furnfture. Compared with this time last year, there is larger forwarding of goods to country stores, while current bookings indicate gain in deliveries to be made of fall and winter lines. High prices and reasonable assurance of great crops make a remarkably prosperous position in agriculture, and this encourages more effort in the distribution of finished products and farm needs.

Bank clearings, $269,236,328, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 14.7 per cent and, compare with $243,483,589 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 29, against 20 last week, 30 in 1908 and 21 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 12, against 3 last week, 10 in 1908 and 5 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Despite irregularities in crop and weather conditions, midsummer influences in trade and industry and conservatism in placing orders ahead, business is of fairly good volume for the season of the year and shows a perceptibly steady advance toward normal proportions. In retail trade clearance sales are universal, but there are numerous reports that reduced purchasing power offsets the stimulus offered by this means of inducing buying. Wholesale trade for immediate delivery and jobbing business in summer goods is of a light volume. Fall trade reports are still relatively the best of any branch. Still, there are reports of quiet in the Southwest, and Chicago seems to be the most active market in the country, with the Northwest coming next as regards favorable reports.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 15, were 206, against 182 last week, 215 in the like week of 1908, 177 in 1907, 18 in 1906 and 165 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week number 36, as compared with 27 last week and 28 the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

It is expected that the opening of the Western reservations at Flathead, Couer d'Alene and Spokane will cause a great Western rush of settlers. Much interest is being shown in this matter, and the Western railroads anticipate being taxed to the utmost to care for the traffic.

ALL THE WAY ROUND.

"Weakly Sentimental" Way That Seemed to Work with Servants.

"She's my seventh in three months," young Mrs. Crosby announced. Her face was worried, but her tone self-satisfied. "Of course it's hard, but some things I will have, if I get worn to a bone training new help. As for cooking-dishes, I do this. While my maid is out on Thursday, I ransack her pantry and pull out every kettle and pan that has been put away in bad condition, and when she comes in at night she finds them stacked all over the kitchen table and sink."

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Robinson, whose model housekeeping is acknowledged by even her dearest friends. Then she bent to her embroidery. The word had slipped out unawares.

"Don't you think it serves her right?"

Mrs. Robinson hesitated. "They come home so tired," she answered, as if apologizing for her own softheartedness. "They have to crowd so much into their one free day. To tell the truth, I always contrive a little surprise for Thursday night. I've done it with every maid I've had for years. Perhaps she finds a convenient bit of tinware that she's been needing, or new dish-towels on the rack—something improved, you know. And if I have any flowers at all in the house, I put at least one blossom in the kitchen to welcome her home."

"Of all sentimental—— Do you mean to say you'd do that and leave a half-washed frying-pan out of sight in the pantry?"

"N-no. I'm afraid I'd wash it and make it as shiny as I possibly could. I believe more in models than critics, myself. And there's always the question whether we may not have given a maid so many things to do that scouring-time has been crowded out. It's hard to see all the way round a thing with one glance, don't you think? We have to take a peep from both sides."

"H'm!" said Mrs. Crosby, doubtfully. "It sounds to me as if you'd spoil a servant in no time, but if I thought it would work——"

"Hilda is certainly a treasure." Mrs. Robinson filled in the pause. "I expect her to stay with me till she marries. My last two have. She's my third in seven years."—Youth's Companion.

A Matter of Addition.

Precision was one of Mr. Williams' chief qualities. He loved to be exact, even to the point of noting in his account book the smallest expenditures—a cent for a newspaper, another for a pencil. Early in January he came out of his library to where his wife was sewing.

"My dear Jane," he began, "I am going to make a criticism that may distress you, because you will probably think it is foolish. I assure you that it is not. I have been reading through the almanac for this year, and there is one obvious error."

"What is it?" said Mrs. Williams, looking up from her work.

"Last year they said that the world was seventy-two million years old, and this year they say the same thing."

"But——" began his wife.

"They should be exact," protested the man. "I can't for the life of me see why they shouldn't say seventy-two million and one. If one's true then the other is. Why, oh, why, can't these people be precise?"

HOME TESTING.

A Sure and Easy Test on Coffee.

To decide the all important question of coffee, whether or not it is really the hidden cause of physical ills and approaching fixed disease, one should make a test of 10 days by leaving off coffee entirely and using well-made Postum.

If relief follows you may know to a certainty that coffee has been your vicious enemy. Of course you can take it back to your heart again, if you like to keep sick.

A lady says: "I had suffered with stomach trouble, nervousness and terrible sick headaches ever since I was a little child, for my people were always great coffee drinkers and let us children have all we wanted. I got so I thought I could not live without coffee but I would not acknowledge that it caused my suffering.

"Then I read so many articles about Postum that I decided to give it a fair trial. I had not used it two weeks in place of coffee until I began to feel like a different person. The headaches and nervousness disappeared and whereas I used to be sick two or three days out of a week while drinking coffee I am now well and strong and sturdy seven days a week, thanks to Postum.

"I had been using Postum three months and had never been sick a day when I thought I would experiment and see if it really was coffee that caused the trouble, so I began to drink coffee again and inside of a week I had a sick spell. I was so ill I was soon convinced that coffee was the cause of all my misery and I went back to Postum, with the result that I was soon well and strong again and determined to stick to Postum and leave coffee alone in the future."

A Hazard of Hearts

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

He laughed shortly. "That's a cheerful light in which to look at it! Don't you think that you could manage to be less downcast over the matter? I have felt such a brute this afternoon."

She flushed hotly, and her voice was sharper, as she asked: "Why?"

"How could I help it when I knew that I was the cause of your being shut up in your cabin all the afternoon? I pictured you wailing and gnashing your teeth, and could see the same idea reflected in Hudson's wrathful eye."

"You need not be afraid. I shall not trouble you with any low spirits, now or in the future."

It was a strange wooing this, with the barely veiled animosity of the woman, and the cynical coolness of the man.

"I am not afraid of your low spirits," he answered, composedly. "I know that if you once take up a thing you will carry it through with pluck."

This was the second time to-night that she had been called plucky, and the contrast between inward feelings and outward aspect was strong enough to bring a mirthless smile to her lips.

"It's a good thing," he went on casually, "that we have two or three days more of the voyage in which to settle things. There is a deal to think over and talk over ahead of us."

"A sort of alphabet of deceit to be mastered," she suggested; but if she had hoped to annoy him she did not succeed.

"Something like that," he agreed.

Was it a nightmare, she wondered to herself—this scene where two people were tying themselves mutually for life, with no more signs of feeling than if they had been playing a game.

It was a marvelous relief to her when their talk was shortly interrupted, and when she could regain the shelter of her cabin.

Like a worn-out child, she crept into her berth, and slept through the long hours of the winter night lulled by the rocking of the waves.

It was a strange bewildered awakening the next morning to the realization of a new scheme of existence; but as that scheme crystallized itself before her she found herself facing it with fresh courage. It was, perhaps, her perfect physical health that enabled her to shake off the shadows of the day before.

However it was, the change was obvious, and brought a pleased expression from Mr. Stewart when he found her alone at the breakfast table, the captain having departed, and her neighbors being late.

"That's right," he said, cheerfully. "I can see by your face that you have had a good night's rest, and I feel less a culprit than I did last evening. Shall we organize our committee of deceit this morning?"

"If you like," she assented, as carelessly as if it had been a request to pass the mustard.

"Good morning. These are nice hours to keep" (addressing Charlie Hudson, who had just made his appearance); and as she turned to him the veil of cold reserve dropped from face and voice.

Charlie Hudson considered himself very unhappy this morning. He had, for the last three or four days, been indulging in a sentimental devotion to the woman, a good five years older than himself. Yesterday had revealed to him the fact that he was only chorus in the play—a looker-on at some crisis—and he had not liked it any better than most people would, and was rather sorry for himself in consequence. It was adding insult to injury, when Mr. Stewart remarked:

"You look as though the ship's champagne hadn't agreed with you."

He made a rather sulky retort, and the breakfast proceeded silently.

"No hopes of a morning on deck," Stewart reported later on. "Our native land is sending forth the welcome of a hopeless drizzle to meet us."

"Your native land," she corrected. "Mine can boast of twelve months' sunshine in the year."

Why did she, all at once, feel so intensely national—so opposed to everything English?—she wondered to herself.

She started back from that momentary vision to find Stewart watching her intently. All he said, however, was:

"As you cannot go on deck, I have put your rugs in your own corner. We can hold our parliament there."

And it was held there, for the others, who had strolled in with social intent, drew back before the signs of an absorbed tete-a-tete. With true feminine instinct, Miss Thorne had armed herself with a bit of emmroidery that kept eyes and fingers busy.

The man glanced at it impatiently once or twice, but said nothing, as leaning his elbows on the table, he opened and glanced down the pages of a notebook. "I've been thinking," he began, "that I had better write out a careful table of names, dates and places, for you to have by you. It will help to keep you from making mistakes."

"How are you counting to supply my want of local knowledge of the Northwest?" she asked ironically.

He looked dubious. "It is certainly rather a weak point," he acknowledged.

"One among many."

"But," he went on, "at any rate, you know thoroughly the general life of the country, enough to supply the differences which exist in the Northwest."

Her interest in the game was beginning to awaken. "That general knowledge would hardly get me safely through five minutes' conversation with anyone who had been there."

"We must avoid such people."

"That might not be always possible."

"Possible enough at Orkville, where so few strangers ever come. You must remember that the difficulties only exist in Mrs. Herbert's company, and of that we shall endeavor to have as little as possible. Who, in general society, is going to put you through your paces about dates and places? You are a Canadian; that fact is easily accepted, but you are hardly likely to meet three people who would understand that the difference between Calgarry and Montreal was any greater than the difference between Plymouth and London. And another thing that I have been thinking of—" he went on, "that it would only be creating useless difficulties for yourself to attempt to play the role of—" he hesitated, "of that habitent woman. I have had no reason, from their letters, to think that they had the faintest idea of what she really was. I am sure that the letters could not have been so cordial if they had. Of course, the intelligence of the hedged-in country dame, only a stage or so less bucolic than the peasant, will have difficulty in grasping the fact that a Canadian can be a more cultivated woman of the world than herself, but she might as well have difficulty over that as anything else. Your French descent will afford enough exotic material to feed her fancy on. Bye-the-bye, should you mind telling me your Christian name?"

Miss Thorne started. It was just what she had been trying to make up her mind to inform him.

"My name is Mathilde," she answered, bending an absorbed scrutiny upon her work.

"Oh——" Then there was a pause before he asked in a gentler tone than usual, "Do you mind it all so very much?" Her silk had knotted, and she pulled at it impatiently.

"What does it matter what I mind, if I am determined to go through with it?" she retorted.

Then, as he remained silent, she looked up with repentance for her rudeness. "Please don't mind me. I did not mean to be so disagreeable. It's only that I get a bit nervous."

He made a movement as if to lay his hand on hers, but she drew it back too quickly.

"Oh, I understand," he answered. "But, if you don't mind, I should like to talk about our immediate plans. I think it would be better to let no hint of our intentions get about on board, don't you?"

"Most certainly," she agreed with alacrity.

"Well, then, may I ask what were your plans on first landing?"

How strange it seemed that those carefully thought-out plans of hers should already loom so vague and unreal. She realized that, already, she was cut adrift from her old life.

"I had written to some lodgings that I know of at Chelsea. I had meant to stay there for a week to do some shopping, which is cheaper done in London, and then go over to Paris, where my friend expects me."

"Is she an ardent friend? Will she want to know all about everything?"

Mathilde smiled with a vision of the sharp face, and the somewhat grim philosophy of its owner.

"She is hardly to be called a friend at all. We were to have joined forces from motives of economy, that is all."

"So much the better. Well, suppose you go to your Chelsea lodgings as you planned. I won't communicate with my people, and they don't know when I am due in England. We can be married by special license and spend a few days at a hotel, writing home then, when to expect us. Do you think that would do?"

Mathilde sat listening to these detailed plans with much the same sensations as the general of a threatened army, who sees himself gradually and inevitably surrounded and outnumbered. Were, what had seemed but a moment before, such vague and visionary projects, really so practical and imminent? She all but started up with an impulse to cry out, Oh, I cannot! It is impossible!" But a second thought came quickly to check her. What was there on the other hand for her to turn to? Wounded pride and the instinct of getting to shelter to hide her sorrows had supplied a strong enough face to bring her away from home, but day by day of that winter voyage had been sapping her courage for the solitary struggle ahead, so that now, if only from having dropped the plan for a few hours, she felt the impossibility of returning to it. She had no strength to struggle now; let the current of fate carry her wherever it would.

Stewart was watching her unveiled agitation with a not unkindly smile.

"Does it seem very formidable at near sight? Never mind, there is really nothing to be afraid of, I promise you. I won't bother you in any way. You shall be as free as you have ever been."

And for all her shrinking, she could not but feel the genuineness in his words. In the next two days there were many such talks and discussions between them.

Almost to her own surprise, Mathilde found herself growing in some measure accustomed to the project, although, in a fashion keeping up the defensive attitude which she had almost involuntarily assumed in Mr. Stewart's society.

CHAPTER VI.

It was on one of the last days of this voyage that Captain Kerr, finding Miss Thorne alone, sat down beside her, and said kindly:

"I have been wanting to have a talk about landing, to find out if I can be of any use to you." It was a novel and unpleasant sensation, this knowledge that she was no longer free to accept a proffered kindness, and that the long course of dissimulation and prevarication must begin, but she did not hesitate.

"You are very good," she responded, with real gratitude. "I think you said that you are not going up to town." All the time she was devoutly hoping that he might not be.

"No, I am going across country to Yorkshire, where the wife and children are. I'm afraid that I shall not be in town for a week or two, and by then you are likely to be off to Paris, I suppose?"

"I thought of crossing in a few days," she answered, in a mechanical fashion.

"Then we are not likely to meet again soon," he said, regretfully, while she inwardly rejoiced over the fact. "But," he went on, "I hope you won't think me intrusive if I say that I fear that yours may be a very lonely life."

"I fear that the fact is an evident one," she said, lightly.

He looked a trifle chilled by the carelessness of her tone, but went on:

"You know that we are not going back to Calgary for at least a year or so, or, perhaps, not until my boys are grown up. We are going to get settled down in Kent very soon, and I wanted to tell you that I am sure my wife would be only too pleased, if at any time you needed a change, you would come and stay with us for a bit. I will give you my club address, which will always find me, and if you will give me yours in Paris, we can write and let you know when we get settled down."

A scorching sense of shame swept over the girl before the trustful kindness of the honest little gentleman. She had counted on having to repel suspicion and distrust, but not on hardening her heart against a frankly outstretched hand.

"How kind you are!" she said, and, do her best, she could not altogether subdue the tremulousness of her voice. "I only wish that I might look forward to coming to you. But you know that I am in for two years' hard work in Paris before going back to Canada to start my ladies' studio. If I am to succeed I must stick to work, and not be running backwards and forwards. That would play too much havoc with my cash. I have a certain number of friends about in England, but I shan't let them know of my whereabouts. They are most of them well-off, and I couldn't afford the proper clothes and things for going among them. When one is poor, it is best to drop out of the running at once."

Captain Kerr did not accept the implied refusal.

"You need not be afraid of needing smart clothes for us. We shall have very modest little quarters. It might some time happen that you wanted rest and country quiet, and a little friendly coddling, and my wife is a great hand at that. At any rate, you will give me your Paris address, won't you?"

"Most willingly," she answered.

While talking, her quick wit had seen the risk of giving him her real or a fabricated address, and she bethought herself of a Paris pension, where, although they knew her name, it would be most unlikely that they would take any trouble to find out where to forward a letter. This she gave him with friendly smile and thanks.

Half an hour later, Stewart, resolutely pacing the wet decks in a chill drizzle, saw Miss Thorne's mackintoshed form emerge from the companionway and come towards him.

This was the first time that she had seemed in any way to seek his society, and he instinctively felt that there was something new in the wind before he heard her say: "I must speak to you."

"Well, there is certainly ample room for any conversation," he answered, with a glance around the deck, deserted save by the oilskin-clad figures of the watch. "But I think you would find it more salubrious if you were to come for a constitutional. Take my arm."

There was enough motion on to make walking a bit difficult, but she answered shortly: "Thanks; I prefer walking walking alone."

"As you please," he agreed, with his usual imperturbability; then wheeling, so as to pace the deck beside her, "You don't mind my pipe? Thanks! Well, now tell me what is the latest excitement."

Under his coolness the impulsiveness of her manner was gone.

(To be continued.)

TO FACE A CHILDLESS WORLD.

Woeful Phophecy Based on Statistics Made by College Professor.

As though we had not already enough worriment, dodging automobiles and taking orders from the cook, we are now told that a hundred and fifty years hence there will be no more children. Viewed from either pole of the situation, this is indeed a woeful prophecy. If you are a lover of children, it makes your blood run cold to realize that they are so soon to be added to the schedule of extinct animals, along with the dodo and the saber-toothed tiger; while if you belong to the opposite class, it is equally distressing to know that this promised millennium is so far remote that you will not be here to enjoy the day when Angora cats and bull pups shall hold undisputed place as household pets.

However, 'tis useless to bewail the oracle of statistics. A learned college professor has computed the rate at which human births are declining, says Clifford Howard in Lippincott's, and when he announces that they will come to an end during the next century and a half we have no alternative but to accept his dictum. It is not a guess; it is a mathematical certainty. To be sure, he might have kept this dismal prediction to himself, but 'tis one of the moral duties of a statistician to temper the present joys of life with melancholy auguries. The horrors of the future are calculated with the same precision as eclipses of the moon. Every twelfth marriage results in a divorce; and yours may be the twelfth. Once a week, with clock-like regularity, some one is murdered in New York, and every ten hours somebody is attacked, every forty-eight minutes a building catches fire, every seven minutes there is a funeral, and every three minutes somebody is arrested; so that if you can remain in New York for a month without getting into trouble you are to be congratulated. But even in your own village home you are not out of danger: : Every two minutes somebody in the United States is killed by tuberculosis; and if that fails to daunt you, then you must know that every minute of the day four and a half persons are tagged by the undertaker; and if you are not one of the four you may be the half.

No prophet who conjures with statistics has ever yet predicted anything pleasant. 'Tis just as well, perhaps, that this is so; for, as Father Gregory once remarked, "Peradventure this world here is made troublesome unto us, lest we be delighted by the way and forget whither we are going." At all events, we may not plan ahead for a picnic without remembering that the day is coming when there will be no water on earth, and our yuletide levity is checked by the knowledge that a hundred years from now there will be no more Christmas trees; also, no more coal. Indeed, whichever way we turn, the future is black with calamity. There will be no more lumber, no more fuel, no more teeth, and now, latest on the list, no more children. And if our descendants manage to survive these subtractions it will be merely to look forward to the time when a slowly cooling sun will put the iceman and all his cousins out of business.

MAID AND MATRON

The Woman Who Understands.

Somewhere she waits to make you win,
your soul in her firm white hands—
Somewhere the gods have made for you the Woman Who Understands!

As the tide went out she found him
Lashed to a spar of Despair,
The wreck of his Ship around him—
The wreck of his Dreams in the air;
Found him and loved him and gathered
The soul of him close to her heart—
The soul that had sailed an uncharted sea,
The soul that had sought to win and be free—
The soul of which she was part!
And there in the dusk she cried to the man,
"Win your battle—you can, you can!"

Broken by Fate, unrelenting,
Scarred by the lashings of Chance;
Bitter his heart—unrepenting—
Hardened by Circumstance,
Shadowed by Failure ever,
Cursing, he would have died,
But the touch of her hand, her warm, strong hand,
And her love of his soul took full command.
Just at the turn of the tide!
Standing beside him, filled with trust,
"Win!" she whispered, "you must, you must!"

Helping and loving and guiding,
Urging, when that were best,
Holding her fears in hiding
Deep in her quiet breast;
This is the woman who kept him
True to his standards lost,
When, tossed in the storm and stress of strife,
He thought himself through with the game of life
And ready to pay the cost.
Watching and guarding, whispering still,
"Win! You can—and you will, you will!"

This is the story of ages,
This is the woman's way;
Wiser than seers or sages,
Lifting us, day by day;
Facing all things with a courage
Nothing can daunt or dim,
Treading Life's path, wherever it leads—
Lined with flowers or choked with weeds,
But ever with him—with him!
Guidon—comrade—golden spur.—
The men who win are helped by her!

Somewhere she waits, strong in belief, your soul in her firm white hands;
Thank well the gods when she comes to you—the Woman Who Understands!

Fads and Fancies in Dress

The princess costume is a feature of the season.

Never were linen suits more popular than now.

The pointed waistline is a novelty after the straight cross effects of the empire cut.

Stripes are not as wide as they were last year in men's shirtings; nor are they as fancy.

Among the materials used for bathing suits are mohair, fine serge, taffeta and silk serge.

Some of the newest and smartest of skirt and coat costumes are being made without sleeves.

The princess, both fitting and semi-fitting, the directoire and the empire, are all holding their own.

The apron front, the successor of the panel, is much employed, and is usually elaborately trimmed.

In order to look well it is necessary that the arrangement of the hair should harmonize with the style of the gown.

A great many collarless gowns and waists are daily appearing and the collar band is becoming more and more scarce.

Many of the sleeves are trimmed with bands of different material, the trimming having the appropriate name of bracelet bands.

Dangles and beads and fringes of silk and leather were never so popular as at the present moment among the leather girdles and shopping bags.

Color embroidery on white, black, cream and ecru will be much used, as well as white on color. Most of the embroidery seen now in the shops is machine made.

While shoes colored to match the costume are rampant even to boldness, all shades of brown and tan may be worn with mixtures or colored costumes; in fact everything except black.

The newest wash scarf for men has the initial of the wearer embroidered on it in a similar pattern to that on the initial handkerchiefs which are to be carried with the scarf when worn.

When Eating.

One should not eat too quickly, should well masticate the food before it is swallowed and not overload the stomach with large quantities of food. Highly seasoned dishes and ice-cold drinks irritate the stomach and may produce a catarrhal condition. Iced water and eating too fast are the two chief causes of the so-called "American dyspepsia." Tea and coffee taken in excess can also give rise to chronic gastric catarrh.

Importance of Good Teeth.

In an address delivered before the Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association, H. W. Norman stated that during the war in South Africa it was found necessary to send back 3,000 soldiers who were unable to bear the rigors of the campaign solely on account of the condition of their teeth. They were not able to chew "bully" beef and hardtack. Teeth seem to have deteriorated, judging by a comparison of the dental apparatus of the modern young person with that of his ancestor's skull in anthropological museums.

Latest in Traveling Suits.

Unglazed French, linens gain in popularity for traveling. No other fabric comes from the laundry with such a delightful crisp brand-new appearance as does the unglazed linen. It is made in all the new and delicate shades as well as the deep, rich tones so popular just now. This up-to-date girl wears a semi-fitting traveling suit of blue, made necessary to complete the artistic effect. The hat is one of rough butter-colored straw, trimmed with black velvet ribbon, a single large rose in the soft colorings of the suit, and a long sweeping aigret in black.

MODISH CALLING COSTUME.

A stunning costume in unique fashion, made from a lovely shade of mode chiffon satin. For trimming and under bodice are dotted cream satin, the dot exactly matching the mode satin. Round yoke and stock are Irish crocheted lace. Note the clever joining of deep flounce to upper part of gown—the narrow pointed tuck suggesting a tunic front. Pointed straps corresponding to those on skirt are used to attach jumper blouse to bodice under arms. Worn with this charming costume is a hat of Neapolitan straw, the crown encircled by a wreath of blue forget-me-nots, below which is another wreath of pink roses. Ties of velvet ribbon matching the roses cross under the chin and fall over shoulders.

How to Land a Husband.

An Atchison family of three girls, all of them equally attractive, had a curiosity to know the best method of landing a husband, and agreed to make an experiment. One of them learned to cook and was a domestic sort of girl. Another learned shorthand and got a position in a downtown office. The third devoted all her attention to society. If we were writing a story we would marry off the girl who could cook within three months; but, alas, the facts are different. The society girl has landed a wealthy man; the stenographer has another nibbling, but the real heroine, the one who can make light biscuits, cook a beefsteak and boil a soup bone, has attracted no attention whatever.—Atchison Globe.

Health and Beauty Hints.

When a disinfectant is quickly needed put carbolic acid in boiling water and set in the room.

When burned with hot grease, apply flour (not water) to the wound and it will not leave a scar.

For a tired head after a trying day, nothing is more restful than a cloth saturated in this toilet water and laid across the temples: Lavender water, one quart; rosewater, five ounces; acetic acid, one-half ounce.

The best grade of borax makes a good dentifrice and also purifies the mouth. It should be mixed with chalk.

Any of the mentholated fluids and salves are excellent to use in cases of summer cold or hay fever. They quickly open the nasal passages and also clear the throat.

Don't rush immediately into the air after a hot bath, both for the sake of your skin and to prevent colds. Dashing with water as cold as you can stand it will make an early outdoor trip safe after the pores are opened by the hot water.

Children playing barefooted on the lawn are often bothered with the little "chiggers." A girl says that by immediately applying gasoline to the bite the insect is instantly killed. It burrows into the skin. Children are especially bothered with them when camping.

Split Ends of Hair.

It is essential for the proper growth of the hair that the split ends should be clipped off with the scissors. The easiest way to do this is to separate the hair into strands, going to work at it systematically, beginning at the front on one side and taking one strand after another around to the front of the other side. Twist each strand tightly and the hairs of different length will stand out so that they may be easily clipped. This is better than singeing the hair by means of lighted tapers passed quickly along the strand, so that the hairs which stand out will be burned off. Unless this is done by one who is an expert the other hairs will become burned and the hair will become uneven.

Much of the false hair worn by women in this country comes from China, according to a recent consular report.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Cottage Cheese.

Either fresh milk or milk ready to turn may be used. To one pint of warm milk add one rennet tablet, bought for 10 cents a dozen at any drug store. In an hour the milk will have turned to clabber if kept in a warm place. Across any dish stretch a clean piece of cheesecloth and empty clabber into it. The whey will run off. (This whey is very healthy to drink, if one likes it) When the clabber is drained dry add two pinches of salt, two dashes of pepper and four tablespoonfuls rich milk or cream.

Tea Biscuits.

One cup of warm sweet milk, in which is melted one tablespoon of lard and one tablespoon of butter. To this add two tablespoons of sugar, one-half teaspoon salt and one-half yeast cake dissolved in a little lukewarm water. Into this sift one and one-half pints of bread flour; mix well and let rise five or six hours. Cut down, form into biscuits, place in pan, let rise one hour in warm place, wipe over with milk and bake fifteen or twenty minutes in hot oven.

Egg Cutlets.

Boil six eggs hard and make a white sauce as follows: Melt one tablespoonful of butter and stir two tablespoonfuls of flour in the melted butter, then pour one pint of milk and stir while cooking and cook until it thickens. Then chop the eggs as fine as peas. Pour the white sauce over them, add a few cracker crumbs and salt and pepper. Then mold in the shape of an egg and roll in cracker crumbs and fry in butter.

Sweet Corn Pickle.

Chop one head of cabbage, sprinkle over it two tablespoonfuls of salt and let stand over night. Cut the kernels from twelve ears of corn, chop two peppers and mix these with the cabbage. Bring two quarts of vinegar to a boil, add one cup of sugar and one-fourth pound mustard (rubbed smooth in a little cold vinegar). Always get the light-colored, first grade of mustard, as dark mustard spoils the taste and appearance.

Dill Pickles.

Take small cucumbers, wash them carefully and let them drain; then pack them in a jar. Make a brine of a pint of salt to a gallon and a half of water; boil and skim it, and when cool pour it over the cucumbers and let them stand for twenty-four hours. Then take them out of the brine, wipe them dry, put back in the jar and cover with good vinegar. Add as much dill as you like.

Baked Quinces.

Core and pare eight ripe, juicy quinces. Put them into a buttered baking dish and fill the cavities with sugar, sprinkle the remains of three-quarters of a cupful of sugar over them and add one and one-half cupfuls of water. Cover and bake until soft in a moderate oven, basting often. Quinces require a long time for cooking. Serve hot with butter and sugar.

Graham Mush.

Soak one cup of graham flour over night. To one quart of boiling water add the flour gradually, so as not to let it lump. Beat in one-quarter teaspoonful salt and boil for three-quarters of an hour. Keep it boiling hard all the time. If it dries too much add more water. Serve with hot or cold milk.

Hickory Nut Tapioca.

Two-thirds cup of hickory nut meats, two-thirds cup of tapioca, one and one-half cups brown sugar, three cups water. Soak tapioca in water over night; in the morning add the sugar, one saltspoon salt and nut meats and steam one hour. Eat cold with whipped or plain thin cream.

Unboiled Currant Jelly.

Stem and wash currants, drain and pat between folds of a towel until dry. Crush the fruit and squeeze it through a cheesecloth bag. Measure the juice and to each pint of it add an equal quantity of sugar. Beat until the sugar is dissolved and the jelly begins to thicken; then pour into glasses.

Strained Okra Soup.

Okra is well liked by most Southerners, and is especially good in soup. Cut the okra in half-inch pieces and boil until tender in one quart of stock. Okra may be employed with chicken or veal broth, and may or may not be strained from the soup before serving.

Clean With Vinegar.

If your cooking utensils have a habit of burning or the victuals stick easily, try boiling a little vinegar in same. Acts like magic, especially with heavy skillets.

Short Suggestions.

White pepper will be found preferable to black in seasoning chicken soup.

For cleaning down stairs a stiff, plain brush is better than a whisk broom.

A few chopped almonds added to a custard or bread pudding will greatly improve its flavor.

To clean white marble wash it thoroughly with soap and water, then brush it over well, especially in the crevices, with whiting mixed with a little blue, as used for ceilings. Allow it to dry thoroughly, and then polish with a clean dry cloth.

If you find the hardwood floor is sticky after being treated with the usual preparation of boiled oil and turpentine, get a pail of strong cider vinegar, wring a cloth out of this and wipe the floor with the strong acid. It will improve it in a short time.

When beating eggs to use for dipping croquettes, a teaspoonful of water added to each egg will avoid any stringiness. When using cornstarch or arrowroot for thickening always wet it well with cold milk or water before stirring it into the hot liquid.

Poking Into Hornets Nest

WITHOUT waiting to get at the bottom of the situation as to the cause for the investigation at the state reformatory, which resulted in William H. Whittaker handing in his resignation as superintendent, some of the leading republican papers of Indiana are going after Governor Marshall rough and tumble.

He is being assailed viciously with the charge that he is a spoilsman, and that he intends to turn the state institutions over to the democrats. It is asserted by the republican editors that the appointment of Dr. Harry C. Sharp on the board of trustees was merely a part of the governor's game to oust Whittaker and put a democrat in his place.

It is thought by the governor's lieutenants that the republicans are trying to make political capital for their party out of the Whittaker incident by making it appear that there was no ground whatever for Whittaker's removal other than the governor's desire to place the institution in the hands of his own party.

One of the governor's attaches said today that the republican editors will stir up a hornet's nest, not only for Whittaker, who is now an inmate of a private sanitarium, but for their party which has boasted of the state institutions.

As far as the governor is concerned, he said, the reformatory incident is closed. He is not going to pursue Whittaker with an investigation that might prove embarrassing since he is no longer connected with the reformatory.

"The republican editors who are hammering away at the governor on the flimsy charge that he is a spoilsman," said his attache, "don't know the real inside of the reformatory story. The fact of the matter is that the real serious charges connected with the Whittaker regime have not been made public. And they will not be published unless it becomes necessary.

"The governor is in possession of information, backed by affidavits, that would place an entirely different light on the affair if he chose to make it public. There is no necessity, however, for publication in the matter since Whittaker has resigned.

"The truth is that the governor is in possession of information of a damaging character and Whittaker's friends knew that it would come out if there was an investigation. Whittaker was not denied an opportunity to refute the charges, as the governor offered to arrange a public investigation, and to give Whittaker all the time he wanted to present his case."—Indianapolis Correspondence Cincinnati Enquirer.

Get It Both Ways

DURING the last fiscal year, which ended June 30, the national government spent $92,000,000 more than it took in. That happened under the high Dingley tariff rates. The new tariff bill makes even higher rates, and of course importations will fall off and the revenue will further fall short. In order to remedy this, special taxes are to be imposed. Thus it happens that under a prohibitive protective tariff, the government loses revenue, the trusts get exclusive control of the American market, and the people are not only compelled to pay special taxes to meet the government's expenses, but to pay to the trusts such private tribute as they care to levy. As has been said before, the protective tariff is being maintained principally for grafting purposes, the powerful interests being the grafters.

Mr. Watson and His Job

JAMES E. WATSON'S name is still being used in connection with the office of governor of Porto Rico. It is said that the place is being kept open for him and that if he concludes to accept the job he will be permitted to name the upper house of the porto Rican legislature, the members of which make up the governor's cabinet. That arrangement would be fine and dandy for everybody except the Porto Ricans. It would not, however, accord with the American principle that the executive and legislative departments must be kept separate. In the meantime, with this office ready at hand when he has time to take it Mr. Watson is putting in his time looking for the ship subsidy and tariff grabs.

THE republican party cannot pass any sort of a bill in congress without creating a lot of new and high-salaried offices. The tariff bill is no exception. It carries with it the creation of a customs court to be composed of several members at $7,500 a year salary, and a commission to advise the president how and when to add 25 per cent to the tariff duties, the members of which will draw perhaps $10,000 a year each. As the "sacred principle of protection" must be preserved, all of the members of this court and commission will, of course, be protectionists.

THE republican politicians are casting about for a chairman for the new state committee that they are to choose next winter. The Beveridge faction seems to be taking it for granted that the next chairman will be a member of their crowd. Doubtless this assumption is based in the fact that Mr. Beveridge controls all the federal patronage. A nice, fat office is always enticing to the republican politician.

If the democratic party is to survive it will not be because of the action of its representatives in congress, but rather because of the strength inherent in its professed principles. To put it another way, democracy will survive and be written in the laws of the land whatever accidents of fortune may fall to the political forces aligned under the party name. The New York World says: The effective regulation of corporations, the warfare upon monopoly, the direct primary, the popular election of United States senators, the tax on the earnings of corporations, the tax on inheritances, the income tax and the regulation and publication of campaign contributions and expenditures have been democratic in their origin, although mainly republican in execution. Democracy thus proves itself once more to be stronger than the democratic party. The lesson which democrats should learn from all this is plain enough to be self-enforcing. There is great popular faith in true democracy. There is great popular intelligence in separating the false from the true. False teachers and teachings are not fatal to democracy itself. They destroy only those who adhere to them. The people distrust these unwise leaders and these strange doctrines, but they show their faith in democratic truth and justice by compelling reluctant republicans to adopt them as their own.

When the stomach fails to perform its functions, the bowels become deranged, the liver and the kidneys congested causing numerous diseases. The stomach and liver must be restored to a healthy condition and Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets can be depended upon to do it. Easy to take and most effective. Sold by Geo. W. Geddes. 26-1m

The banks which are opposing the guaranty law insist that it is unfair to make them go security for each other—wouldn't it be a joke if the court sustained the objection and then applied it to security required by the bank? Suppose banks could not require security.

The newspaper man comes in contact with more phases of humanity, perhaps, than any other business man. He finds the "touchy" individual who wears his heart on his sleeve, the mercenary who wants $5 worth for his dollar, the dead beat who intends never to pay, the kicker who is never satisfied with anything, and the good soul who appreciates the paper and drops words of encouragement as well as coin to help it along.—Shelbyville News.

The statement is sent out from New York that in the judgment of the National Association for the Study of Tuberculosis more than one million school children will die of that disease before they reach the age of eighteen years. The society is endeavoring to get the attention of the public so that steps can be taken to confine this most dangerous of all diseases and to cure those who are suffering from it in its incipient stages. It is claimed that the disease can be baffled by leading an out door life and sleeping in the open air. Actual tests have been made in this direction and good results have been obtained.

A newspaper exchange gives this as a definition of what an automobile is: "The automobile is a large iron and rubber centrivance for transforming gasoline into speed, luxury, excitement and obituaries. It consists of a handsome leather upholstered carriage body mounted on fat rubber tired wheels and containing a gizzard full of machinery suffering from various ailments. It is the speediest and most stylish form of transportation known. It has run over 100 miles and ten thousand people. It can transport seven people from the front porch to the police station, the bankruptcy court or the golden gates in less time than any other known method."

You have often read of those cases where a woman ran a needle into her finger and about twenty years later it worked itself out of her big toe. Well, here's a more wonderful case still: An Ohio school teacher three years ago made the mistake of pinning her belt with a needle and the needle ran into her and could not be found; just the other day it was discovered coming out of the arm of one of the local school officials who was keeping company with her at the time of the accident. We don't know how the needle was recognized as the same one unless by the expression of its eye. How it got from the young lady's waist into the man's arm is a secret which baffles science.—Pathfinder.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it. Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Rev. Parker made a business trip to Kendallville on last Thursday and reports that the hail storm was much more severe there than here, cutting leaves off the trees and damaging crops considerable.

Frank P. Seiler, the well known real estate agent, who was out north of Auburn Friday, driving, reports that the hail storm in the vicinity of the farm of Carl Eckhart, about two miles north of town, was very severe and damaging. Mrs. Howard Gould's testimony that a woman ought to have $40,000 a year for dress is being generally discussed by American women. After calculating the amount of time occupied at the dressmakers and in dressing and undressing the average woman is apt to ask whether any rational enjoyment can be derived from such a life. Wealth becomes a burden when it entails such a waste of time and energy, not speak of the expenditure of money The simple life is more attractive.

The old mill dam across Fish creek, near Hamilton, was recently torn out when the dredge which has been lowering the waters of the creek passed through the old land mark. When the waters were let down the fishermen were there, and it is estimated that at least a wagon load of fine fish were taken out of the waters. The farmers and some of the fishermen from Hamilton gathered at the dam when the water was lowered and they had no trouble whatever in landing some big fish, some of them weighing as much as ten and twenty pounds. The fish consisted of bass and pickerel. W. M. Goodale is the farmer who owns the farm on which the old flour mill was operated by the waters from this dam. He had a fine dam there and the mill was considered a valuable property, but when the court condemned his dam and he was ordered to take it out the property became valueless to him as a flouring mill. He was allowed $2,300 damages for the removal of the dam, but was assessed $380 as benefits to his farming land, leaving him net $1,920. Mr. Goodale can readily see how he was damaged to the great extent by having the mill dam torn down but it is not as evident to him in that he was benefitted to the amount of $380.—Auburn Courier.

CHINESE MISSIONS

THE pitiful fate of Elsie Sigel at the age of 20 should teach religious societies which persist in converting the Asiatics in our cities, with the aid of a pretty girl, of the perils attending the task. These Orientals look upon women from viewpoints entirely different from those of Americans and are not to be trusted. They are a bad lot, says the Utica Globe, and no reputable woman should confide herself to their honor—for they have none. Miss Sigel's intentions originally were of the best. She was strongly religious and anxious to do something to extend Christianity. In the Mongolians she saw the chance and became a worker in the Chinese mission. Familiarity with the men in the Sunday school led to love, and, finally, to the loss of her good name. Envy was aroused by her accepting court from two Chinamen. Because she played false in a dishonorable role one of these lovers strangled her.

Since the pitiful fate of Elsie Sigel came to light there has gone forth a general denunciation of the system which permits the individual teaching of Chinamen by women. All kinds of abuse has been heaped upon the Chinese and they have been represented as ravenous beasts lying in wait for their prey. The facts in the case are far different, if we are to accept the verdict of those most familiar with the situation in Chinatown. The mission workers are loud in their denunciation of the white women who not only place themselves in the way of these Chinese men but actually force themselves upon them, visiting their rooms and cultivating intimacies which, were the men white, would become subjects for scandal and divorce suits.

One missionary says: "I have seen young, foolish, frivolous-minded women deliberately egging the Chinese Bible students on to dangerous flirtations. It makes me shudder to contemplate the results." "Deliver me," said another mission worker, "from the women who come from fashionable districts with one hand clutching the Bible and the other stretched out in coquetry to these young Chinamen. If their husbands knew one-quarter what I could tell them, of what these women do and where they go, the divorce courts would be lively for some time to come. Many of these women need conversion more than the Chinese do."

Most of the missionary women in New York City who become infatuated with Chinese live in respectable homes; they may or may not take cocaine or opium—and their association with Chinese is in visits to these men. Elsie Sigel, for instance, had been a frequent visitor for at least two years in the rooms of Leon and other Chinamen. The women are often the aggressors. They begin by accepting presents from these young students whom they are seeking to lead into Christianity, and they end by falling in love with them.

Mission Worker's Views.

Helen F. Clark, who has worked in the Chinese district for seventeen years, in a lengthy interview for the New York Herald, says: "If Chinamen are to be Christianized, let the men do it. White women have no business mixing up with Chinese men. I say this deliberately and not hysterically. I have always urged that it was folly for women to attempt these things. Elsie Sigel's life ended in a terrible tragedy, but there are many women tottering on the edge of just as fearful an abyss.

"The social life of China is divided into two distinct spheres—that of the males and that of the females—and they never approach each other in respectable circles. I am not dealing with the criminal element of either the Chinese or American race. The men follow their business and their social diversions together. They eat and drink together. The women live in apartments separated from the men, and they likewise eat and drink and have their social life together. The family life of Christian Europe and America is utterly unknown to the Chinese. The women do not go upon the streets of their cities until they are past middle age.

"The men rarely ever know any women save those of their own families. When a man is to be married his mother sends a professional go-between to select the bride. The bridegroom does not see the face of the bride until her unveiling after the ceremonies are concluded. If a man should by any chance meet an elderly woman that he knew upon the street, even though she were his near relative, he would not betray the unfortunate fact by the lifting of an eyelash. He could not put a greater insult upon her than to speak to or recognize her in the public street.

"Neither does a man in polite society demean himself by so much as a reference to his wife. If circumstances force him to mention her to an intimate friend, she is spoken of—not by her name—oh, no—but merely by the designation 'the stupid one of the inner chamber.'

"According to the Chinese conception, woman is but a high type of animal. She possesses no soul, no intellect capable of development. She is not a fit subject to associate with man. True, his mother is to be revered, but only because she is his mother. A certain amount of honor will also be given his wife if she bear sons to her lord and master. But further than that woman for centuries has had no honor or rights or privileges save what her male relatives chose to accord her.

"Now, take such a man, the product of thirty centuries of such an unnatural conception of womanhood, of such a repellent attitude to the entire sex, of such distorted views of home and social life, carry him across the water shut down in the hold of an ocean steamer and then set him suddenly in the streets of an American city. What is the effect upon his mind?

"One Chinese man told me, how the first time he walked the streets of San Francisco, he was shocked when he actually saw with his own eyes a man and woman walking side by side in the open street, her hand in his arm, and they were talking together! He felt as you would have felt if you had been suddenly set upon a highway of the Hottentots, unshielded, while there passed by a population clothed only in fresh air and sunshine.

"The Chinaman in time regains his breath. In time also he can bring himself to speak to a woman—that is to say, an American woman. If he is a truly good man this time is rather long in coming. In time perhaps a thought filters slowly, very slowly, through his brain that possibly after all his conceptions of women may have been a little awry, but this depends upon the kind of woman he meets and upon the kind of man he is.

"Now, take this man—this man from the environment of men, this man filled with a supreme, inherited contempt for women—and set him down in a Chinese Sunday school of the East. What is the effect upon his mind? True, he has been prepared for it in a way by his friends and by what he has seen upon the streets, but in a very real sense he is not prepared for it, not prepared for the sudden close proximity, not of one woman, but of many women, women of all ages and temperaments and characters. The scarcity of American men in the Sunday schools, their frequent subordination to women superintendents, the easy, if not familiar, intercourse between the American men and women, all smite on the bewildered senses of the Chinese with astounding effect. What does this releasement mean, then? God knows how often it has led to tragedy!

System Is Wrong.

"The temptation to the unthinking girl has been great. The deference of her pupil, the marked reverence of his attitude, his very timidity and native reticence, were so many magnets to draw on the thoughtless, foolish woman. Familiarity took the place of modest and unconscious behavior on her part. All the Chinese were 'boys' to their teachers, and too often were treated as such, though they might be 40 years old.

"I tell you, this system is a crime. Elsie Sigel, only 19 years old, unprotected by her father, led into this association by her own mother, her very desire to do good turned into the devil's trap for her young feet."

The denominations which encourage missionary work among the degraded Chinese must be held in part accountable for the death and disgrace of this girl, comments the Utica Globe. Only for the unwise and inexplicable policy which persists in attempting to gain converts at such a fearful risk Miss Sigel would be alive and happy to-day instead of filling a dishonored grave. There are plenty of opportunities for gaining new members to the church without taking up with those which now and then means loss of honor to the women engaged in the work. If we must bring the Chinamen over to Christianity, let the men do the converting. It is the only safe way, even if results come more slowly than by the methods which had their logical sequence in the killing of Elsie Sigel.

CHINESE AS WITNESSES.

They Are the Hardest Material the Police Have to Deal With.

A Chinaman makes the most unsatisfactory witness imaginable. His placid, immobile countenance never gives him away and he always has a refuge in 'me no understand Englis'." This he repeats every time he feels himself getting cornered, no matter how fluently he can speak the language. He will lie as serenely and easily as though he were educated to it and when caught in a falsehood his imperturbability is not disturbed in the slightest. He merely says "Me will tell truth now." Then he proceeds to lie some more, but on another tack. The police always dread having to force facts from a Chinaman.

Chung Sing, the Chink who for three days was given the "third degree" in the effort to get from him all he knew in regard to the murder of Elsie Sigel, was a match for half a dozen inquisitors. He would lie, then admit that he lied and then lie some more. At times he was sullen and insolent. Then he would be bland and smiling. But at no time could his questioners be sure he was telling the truth. His sneers, his bravado, his indifference and his urbanity were always on tap and he was proof against threats or cajolery.

Only when the interpreter talked to him in his own language and told him that he was making enemies among decent Chinamen by his attitude and that he would be punished by his own countrymen did he show any fear. He had no fear of what the laws of the United States might have in store for him, but he plainly dreaded the secret vengeance of his own people.

Gould Case Revelations.

The trial of the separation suit of Mrs. Howard Gould at New York has been replete with data showing the extravagant notions of women of her class, and has given to the public some idea of the income of the Gould heirs. In support of her contention of non-support, Mrs. Gould gave to the court an itemized list of her ordinary living expenses before her husband left her. This showed that she required $40,000 a year for clothes alone, and that she wore two or three gowns each day, costing from $300 to $600 each. She rarely wore one a second time, as that was bad form. Her servants, automobiles, house rent, etc., brought the total up to $120,000, and that was said to be the minimum on which a "lady" could keep in the swim. The court threw out the claim of non-support, and likewise the charge of cruelty. This left the husband only to prove that his wife had habits that justified desertion. Former servants were called, who told that Mrs. Gould was frequently drunk, and that she swore at servants and others. George Gould, brother of Howard, testified that the estate of Jay Gould, the father, had amounted to some $80,000,000, and that it had never been divided, the will having provided that the children should have equal shares of the proceeds as long as they lived. Howard's income averaged over $700,000 a year.

British Emotional Insanity.

One of the most striking addresses made at the Lake Mohonk Conference on arbitration at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., was that of President Butler of Columbia University, who presided. He said that the storm center of the world's weather to-day was to be found in the condition of the English mind. The English nation appeared to be for the moment possessed with the evil spirit of militarism. In explaining the recent remarkable obsession of the British people regarding a German invasion he said they were afflicted with a species of emotional insanity, due to a wrong interpretation of the readjustment of the economic position and importance of the principal nations. Germany had made tremendous gains and England had lost her primacy in some fields, but it was in no sense a cause of war, and indeed a war would only tend to hasten the change.

Work of Congress

During a session lasting nearly four hours the Philippine tariff bill and the bill automatically continuing the Porto Rican budget were passed by the Senate Friday. Only a nominal resistance was offered by the minority to these measures. An amendment by Senator Johnson (Ala.) declaring the intention of the United States eventually to grant independence to the Philippines was opposed as being out of place in this bill, and was rejected. Senator Culberson sought to limit the operation of the Porto Rican act to July 1, 1910, but his amendment for that purpose was defeated. The Senate entered upon an agreement to adjourn three days at a time until the conference report on the tariff bill is ready for consideration, and also not to enact any legislation when it does convene. After a debate of an hour and a half the House referred the tariff bill to the conferees, disagreeing to all of the 847 amendments of the Senate, by a vote of 178 to 151. Eighteen Republicans voted against this action and one Democrat voted for it. Chairman Payne's plea to have the conferees sent to the conference unhampered with instructions was granted. At 3:26 the House adjourned to Monday noon.

:—:-

The House, after four hours' debate Monday, adopted by a vote of 317 to 14 the joint resolution submitting to the various legislatures for ratification the proposed amendment to the Constitution empowering Congress to levy an income tax, the Democrats voting to a man for the amendment. Adjournment was taken until Thursday.

-:—:-

The Senate was in session twenty minutes Tuesday, adjourning at 12:20 until Friday. The major portion of the time of the sitting was devoted to a discussion of the unanimous consent agreement not to transact any business while the tariff conference is in progress. Senator Carter tried to have passed a bill pertaining to the affairs of the District of Columbia on the ground that the bill was "such a little one" that no harm could result from its passage. But Senators Lodge and Culberson, standing guard over the interests of the two sides of the chamber, objected and thus prevented action. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Thursday. After a lively debate the Democrats in the House failed in their efforts to have a provision brought in by Mr. Tawney appropriating $25,000 for President Taft's traveling expenses ruled out or stricken out of an urgent deficiency bill. The latter measure was under consideration throughout the session. Members on the Democratic side were unsparing in their charges of bad faith, because the House at the last session, as they alleged, pledged itself not to make any additional allowances to the President. Mr. Rainey of Illinois gave as the reason for its presentation at this time the desire of the President to "boost" the League of Republican Clubs throughout the country.

HAS REPTILES TO TRADE.

Snake Expert at Bronx Zoo to Make Exchanges in Europe.

Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the reptile house at the Bronx zoo, New York, has gone to Europe with several crates of poisonous American snakes and a number of surplus animals which have found birth in the zoo. These he will trade to the zoological gardens in England, Germany, France and other countries for other snakes and animals which the Bronx zoo desires. In specially constructed crates he has taken a dozen vipers, a dozen diamond rattlers, a dozen common rattlers, a dozen coral snakes, several lance-head vipers from South America, a dozen moccasins and a few other deadly reptiles. In exchange for these Mr. Ditmars will bring back specimens of the cobra, asp, and other deadly snakes which are to be found in the East. The snakes and small animals of the Bronx zoo have been multiplying so rapidly that it has been found advantageous to trade them abroad for specimens not represented here.

Model Homes for Cities.

No utterance made at the recent Conference on City Planning at Washington has attracted wider attention than that of Henry Morgenthau, who said: "We now have in the ninety-one largest cities in the United States 25,000,000 of population at least. Many are dependent upon incomes of less than $500 a year. In twenty years this number will be doubled. What a great service to this nation it would be to solve their housing problem, make healthy, patriotic citizens the mainstay of the republic, instead of letting them drift into a disease-infected, socialistically inclined mass, and then spending millions of dollars on hospitals to cure them, provisions to punish them and police to repress them."

A Crime in France.

Although Oliver Wendell Holmes always replied to autograph hunters when stamps were inclosed, Alexander Dumas did not. He kept their stamps and used them himself. Some citizens of Marseilles have followed his example and have thereby got into trouble, a Paris dispatch to the Denver News Tribune says.

A local wine merchant pestered three prominent men in his district, including a retired judge, with letters offering his vintages and inclosing stamps for reply and all kept the stamps. Whereupon the wine merchant lodged a complaint against them for a swindling abuse of confidence and appropriation of sums intrusted to them.

The judicial authorities received the complaint, acted upon it and opened criminal proceedings against all three persons on the charge of appropriating a 2-cent stamp each. It seems that no other legal course was open to the authorities than to proceed in the matter. The sequel is worse.

It is reported that the police, armed with search warrants, have effected domiciliary visits in the residences of the three accused persons in order to discover the "corpus delicti" in each case—that is to say, the wine merchant's letter containing the stamp for a reply.

If the stamp be found unused the three accused persons will be ordered to disgorge the property wrongfully detained by them. If it be not found the presumption, apparently, will be that they used the property and, logically, a conviction for swindling should follow.

WHY PEOPLE SUFFER.

Too often the kidneys are the cause and the sufferer is not aware of it. Sick kidneys bring backache and side pains, lameness and stiffness, dizziness, headaches, tired-feeling, urinary troubles. Doan's Kidney Pills cure the cause. Nathan R. Hill, Stryker, Ohio, says: "Kidney troubles pulled me down until I was skin and bone. I could not work and finally took to bed. Doctors said I had gravel and advised an operation. The secretions were painful and sometimes almost stopped. Doan's Kidney Pills brought relief and finally a cure."

Badly Hurt.

Imagination has a good deal to do with troubles; it can both create and intensify them. A writer in the Kansas City Journal tells of an incident that occurred on a Kansas train some time ago. The rails spread, and the engine, tender and baggage car left the track, but the jar was not heard enough to disturb the sleepers in the rear Pullmans.

In the last Pullman the porter was shining shoes, and thinking that the train was stopping at an unusual place, he went ahead to see what was the matter. He was told that the engine could be put back again within a couple of hours and the track repaired. So he went back to his shoes.

Suddenly a head popped out of one of the berths and a man shouted: "Say, porter, what we stopping here for?"

"Oh," answered the porter, "we had a wreck."

"A wreck? Wow! Oh—oh—oh—oh—wow—wow! My neck! My neck! My chest! My back! Oh—oh—oh!"

Luck on the Stage.

Stock exchange men and racing men regard luck as a side issue. They follow it secretly and make excuses for it if it goes astray, as if it were a personal friend; but the actor has a deep reverence for it, and superstitious customs that sprang into observance during the Restoration period are still maintained in the age of socialism and problem plays. It is almost pathetic to see the joy that beams in the faces of a theatrical company at rehearsals if a harmless, necessary cat strolls on the stage; but if the cat sits down and appears to watch the proceedings with approval the joy becomes ecstatic.—Black and White.

COSTLY PRIZE OFFERED FOR THE BEST GROWER OF CORN

W. K. Kellogg of Battle Creek, Mich., Gives a $1,000 Trophy to Be Competed for by the Farmers.

Battle Creek, Mich.—For the purpose of stimulating the interest of the farmers of the country in the improvement of the grade of corn and in securing a greater yield, W. K. Kellogg of this city has offered a gold and silver trophy to be competed for at the third annual national corn exposition to be held at Omaha, Neb., Dec. 6 to 18 of this year. The trophy will be known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Exposition trophy, will cost $1,000, and will become the personal property of any exhibitor winning it twice. The trophy will be in the shape of a massive vase, and will probably be designed and built by either Gorham or Tiffany.

Mr. Kellogg has just returned from Chicago where he held a conference with Professor P. G. Holden of the Iowa State Agricultural College at Ames, and Stanley Clague, head of a large Chicago advertising agency. Professor Holden is known as the foremost authority of the country on corn growing, and Mr. Kellogg, who is a large manufacturer of food products made from corn, is keenly interested in all movements tending to improve the quality of the cereal. This year he has donated $1,000 to be divided in several prizes among the corn growers of Iowa, and at Professor Holden's suggestion, he decided to offer the Kellogg trophy to be competed for by the corn growers of the nation.

"Corn is the greatest crop of the country," said Mr. Kellogg to-day, "and the bigger the yield of corn the greater the country's prosperity. Seed selection and improved methods of cultivation will not only greatly increase the yield per acre, but will also increase the protein in the corn and thus enhance its nutritious qualities. If the yield per acre, for instance, can be increased five bushels in the State of Nebraska alone, it will add $25,000,000 to the wealth of the farmers of the State. The National Corn Exposition is doing a great work in educating the farmers, and I am glad to help the work along."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

James H. Bacon, lineman for the Central Union Telephone Company, living at 806 West Twenty-seventh street, Indianapolis, was killed by an electric current while working on the wires near Central avenue and Forty-sixth street.

It cost W. H. Kingery $41 to kill a redbird at Terre Haute. That was the amount of the fine and costs when he was arraigned by a deputy game warden. It is not commonly known that redbirds may not be killed or caged and that the fine is a heavy one.

Edward R. Floyd, of Frankfort, one of the best known men in the county, died at the Palmer Hospital of an acute attack of indigestion. He served one term in the State Legislature, was postmaster at Middle Fork for a number of years, and also served in the army. He was about 58 years old and leaves a widow and family.

Members of the Masonic order in Fortville gave a reception recently for Uncle Silas Helms, aged 84 years, living north of the town, at the "Old Mill," near which he has lived for more than seventy-five years. He has been a Master Mason for more than fifty-five years, and is the only living charter member of Fortville Lodge No. 207. The members presented him with a handsome gold headed cane.

Begging for an ax, knife or razor, so that he could keep away the elephants, tigers and enemies that were attacking him, an insane man supposed to be Fred A. Mitchell, of Indianapolis, was placed in jail at South Bend. Judging from his talk, the man, who is about 30 years old, is well educated. It is believed that he has escaped from some hospital, as he begged piteously not to be put in the straitjacket. All the jail officials could get out of him was that he was from Indianapolis. When asked his name, he crouched to a sprinter's position and said: "To the general public, I'm Fred A. Mitchell, but confidentially I'm John the Baptist."

Charles F. McClelland, a Danville undertaker, has had the unusual experience of conducting six funerals at three homes in Danville within the last three months. On April 5 he buried Alfred Allee, and on July 3 Mrs. Allee, his wife. On June 2 he buried George Gentry, and on June 11 Mrs. Gentry was carried from the same house to her last resting place. On June 8 he conducted the funeral of Mrs. Samuel Moore at the home of her son, John W. Moore, and on June 18 he had charge of the funeral of Mrs. Lizzie Scott Kowlski, which was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Moore.

The prize nature-faker story comes from this State and is as follows: A cat, owned by Dr. Charles L. Stevens, of Corydon, is a living barometer, and by its peculiar antics residents can tell what kind of weather is coming. Due to this fact Dr. Stevens' home has become the Corydon weather bureau. A peculiar feature is that the cat transmits her barometrical characteristics to her young, and for this reason her kittens are in great demand. Dr. Stevens frequently receives telephone calls inquiring of the cat's antics, as all residents have come to depend upon the animal for weather predictions.

Two little English sparrows whipped a large bald eagle, according to H. Benton and L. D. Simons, who say that while hunting in the woods east of St. Anne they saw a bald eagle perched on the limb of a dead tree, vainly trying to beat off two sparrows that were attacking him fiercely. Presently, the hunters assert, the eagle started to fly away, the sparrows pursuing and picking the bird savagely under the wings and about the head. The eagle uttered loud and frequent screams, either of fear or rage, or both, the men said, and when last seen was making "record time" in an effort to shake off his pursuers.

Property owners in the vicinity of the farm owned by Robert Baker, near Idaville, a town a short distance west of Logansport, threaten an injunction suit if Baker persists in his purpose of starting a skunk farm. Baker is a trapper, who has made much money from skunk oil and skins. But skunks are getting scarce, and this has led him to believe that he can make more money in raising them than in hunting. Experiments which he has made convinces him that they can be successfully and profitably raised, and he is now arranging to go into the business on a big scale. He is going to fence in five acres with fine meshed screening, which will be sunk in the ground three feet and which will be six feet high. Baker figures to raise about one thousand skunks every year, and he has contracted for machinery to extract the oil. This is almost as valuable as the skins, which average about one dollar each. Neighbors fear that the odor from the skunk farm will make life unbearable in that vicinity, and wish to prevent Baker from going into the business.

Chris Reigler, of Greensburg, has a hen that has a taste for English sparrows and catches them and kills them. Mrs. Reigler is authority for the statement and she says she has seen the hen catch the birds.

Once wealthy, owning several Wabash County farms, Sampson Hoch, who lost his fortune through bad investments, and was made a cripple for life in an accident several years ago, died a few days ago at the County Infirmary in Wabash.

Miss Oakley Brown, the 14-year-old daughter of Mrs. Margaret Brown, a widow of Evansville, committed suicide because she was disappointed in not getting a new dress.

The "Panic Hair Cut," a new style in hair dressing, has made its appearance at Oakland City. The hair cut consists of a close clipper cut, afterward shaving a strip about an inch wide from the middle of the forehead to the back of the neck. The peculiar name given it arose from the effect produced when one wearing this style of head dress lifts the hat.

Mrs. Annie Emery, widow of Orlin Emery, of Evansville, who died a week ago, followed her husband in death a few days ago. Her death was caused by grief.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sutphin, 84 years old, tripped on the stairs at her home in Middletown and fell to her death. She was the mother of the late Dr. John Sutphin, former head of the Ohio Knights of Pythias.

Mrs. Andrew Ritter is dead in Huntington from tetanus, resulting from running a splinter into her foot while walking in her yard. The accident took place ten days ago but only home remedies were used until lockjaw began developing.

Ethel Hudson, of 2645 Shelby street, Indianapolis, was taken out of a Chinese laundry at Vincennes and sent home by the police. She claims Lock Suey as her sweetheart, and says she will marry him. Five hundred saw her taken to the station. Suey was not allowed to escort her.

Joseph Schu's 10-year-old dog "Bob," one of the best-known canines of Evansville, died of a broken heart. The dog's master left the city a week ago for a trip, and the animal grieved over his departure, refused food and finally passed away after waiting in vain for his master to return.

A bird's nest caused a fire at the Columbus barns of the Indianapolis, Columbus & Southern Traction Company. A robin had built a nest between the interior trolley wires and the ceiling, and it is supposed a spark from a passing trolley wheel fired the nest. The blaze spread to the ceiling and the fire department was called to extinguish the blaze. The loss was trivial.

Charles Warner, a glass blower of Terre Haute, who is spending the summer vacation in Westfield, with his father-in-law, Luther Cox, was assisting at the saw and planing mill of O. E. Talbert & Co., when his hand got caught in a ripsaw. He lost two fingers of his left hand. Several who have met with similar misfortunes at this mill are talking of holding a reunion.

Around the world in the famous cruise of the battleship squadron went Harry D. Meyers, 22 years old, of Muncie, only to die at home from the effects of the voyage. While aboard the battleship Tennessee he contracted a lung affection that became so serious he was confined to a Government hospital in Colorado for a while, but subsequently rallied considerably and came home to Muncie, where he died. He was the son of Michael Meyers.

John Brown, a farmer living a mile south of Milton, brought a dog home from Richmond a few days ago. The animal was of the Scotch collie breed and when brought over Mr. Brown had him in a closed carriage. The animal was kept confined a few days and then let out. Soon afterward it was missing and after fruitless inquiries as to its whereabouts, Mr. Brown telephoned to Charles White, of Richmond, the former owner of the animal, and found that it had gone back home, sixteen miles.

The Standard Oil Company is building a million-dollar plant at Whiting for the manufacture of butter. The processes have been fully worked out. Heavy oils of no use for illuminates are passed through red hot tubes to decompose them into fixed gases—menthone and ethone. These are then converted into methyl and ethyl alcohols, thence into acetic and other acids. These are transformed into glyceral testers of afts by heating with glycerin, and by combining fats in proportion a pure butter is made.

Mrs. Delores Partlow German, a pretty girl of 23 years, who was married to Charles German, an Elwood tinplate worker, May 17, found that her new matrimonial alliance was a disappointing one, and after a brief wedded life left a note saying that she was going to the home of a sister in Arkansas, and that it would be useless to follow her. It is said, however, that she was seen in Tipton a few days ago. She left her wedding ring and a fond farewell, with thanks for kind treatment at her husband's home.

Mrs. Harry Nading is the owner of a millinery store at Flatrock. Mr. and Mrs. Nading are also the owners of a little dog. Mrs. Nading went to the store after supper, having a hat to trim, and when she finished she locked the place and returned home, leaving the dog in the store unintentionally. About midnight a resident of the place happened to pass the store, and hearing a racket ran to the Nading home, where he informed the household that there was a burglar in the place. Mr. Nading was soon on the spot, and after peering into a window saw that the dog was creating all the noise. He unlocked the door and found the curtains had been pulled from their fastenings, hats scattered in all directions, and artificial flowers and fruits damaged.

John Preble, a Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction Company lineman, sustained a shock of 2,200 volts in a fall off a forty-foot trolley pole, yet was not severely injured.

The annual session of the Northern Indiana Teachers' Association will be held at Fort Wayne April 7 to 9, 1910. Professor L. N. Hines, of Crawfordsville, chairman of the executive committee, announced the selection after a trip to Ft. Wayne, investigating the hotel accommodations.

Typhoid fever is prevalent at Gary. Dr. T. W. Templin, the health officer, traced the source of the disease to milk shipped from Miller Station and McCool dairies, where farmers were found to have children sick with the fever.

Chester Worth, of Plainfield, who played the piano constantly with both hands from 6 p. m. one day till 7:02 a. m. the following day, challenges any one in the State to repeat his performance. It is estimated that Worth sounded 1,100,000 notes in the thirteen hours he played.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Dr. Norman M. Geer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "During the last twelve years I have frequently recommended your Castoria as one of the best preparations of the kind, being safe in the hands of parents and very effective in relieving children's disorders, while the ease with which such a pleasant preparation can be administered is a great advantage."

TOLD TO USE CUTICURA

After Specialist Failed to Cure Her Intense Itching Eczema—Had Been Tortured and Disfigured but Soon Cured of Dreadful Humor.

"I contracted eczema and suffered intensely for about ten months. At times I thought I would scratch myself to pieces. My face and arms were covered with large red patches, so that I was ashamed to go out. I was advised to go to a doctor who was a specialist in skin diseases, but I received very little relief. I tried every known remedy, with the same results. I thought I would never get better until a friend of mine told me to try the Cuticura Remedies. So I tried them, and after four or five applications of Cuticura Ointment I was relieved of my unbearable itching. I used two sets of the Cuticura Remedies, and I am completely cured. Miss Barbara Kral, Highlandtown, Md., Jan. 9, 1908."

A Vigorous Critic.

Ruskin was always hot on the trail of immature critics, but he seems to have gone beyond himself on a certain occasion, which Chambers' Journal records, when he threw a large quarto at A. Stodart Walker's head because he had dared question the artistic excellence, in the matter of proportion, of Michelangelo's "Moses" in Rome.

After the throwing was over, Ruskin asked:

"How often have you seen it?"

"Oh, half a dozen times," Stodart Walker answered, confidently.

"Good heavens!" Ruskin cried. "No man should dare to give an opinion on any work of art unless he has seen it every day for six months;" adding, after a pause, "and even then he should hold his tongue if he has used his eyes as you seem to have used them."

Probably Won't.

The Point of View.

"But did you not prove last week, when he was on trial for murder, that he had been from birth a raving maniac?" interposed the court.

The lawyer smiled in a superior way. "Surely," he said, "your honor would not have it believed that this court is on the intellectual plane of that jury."—Philadelphia Ledger.

SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD
For the Best Ear of Corn
To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy
To be Awarded at the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two single rules will govern the plan, and they are—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition; Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909; and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1912. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

The Auburn Foundry company is in the midst of the season's slump, there being only five men employed at present in the foundry. The foundry companies over the state are all letting their men go because of the shortage in the business just at present, but the local shop is the only one running in this vicinity. They are turning out short orders for the local auto and carriage factories.—DeKalb Co. Press.

The Epworth League of the Methodist church held a social on the beautiful lawn of Mr. Henry Tess on North Broadway Wednesday night. A special orchestra furnished music during the evening. Booths were erected in imitation of a carnival, and lunch, coffee, ice cream, cake and other refreshments were sold. The occasion was thoroughly enjoyed by the large crowd in attendance, as the program throughout was an excellent one.

D. M. Parry, of Indianapolis, who recently withdrew from the Parry Manufacturing company, of that city, has organized a million dollar company and will erect buildings at once for the manufacture of automobiles. He expects to have the first machine ready by the first of September, and asserts that the company will turn out 5,000 machines next year and furnish employment for 2,000 men. This does not look much like the auto craze had reached its height, but would indicate that Mr. Parry is of the opinion that now is a good time to get in. He will make two grades of machines—a runabout and a touring car.

FOUGHT THE OFFICER

Garrett Marshal Had Stiff Tussel with a Drunk---Now in the Auburn Jail.

Michael Newbauer, of Garrett, is now lingering in the DeKalb county jail, where he will stay, in all probability, for the next thirty days unless friends come to his assistance and pay his fine and costs of $30 50, imposed upon him by Justice of the Peace Green.

The charges against Newbauer, to which he pleaded guilty and was fined, are drunkedness and assaulting an officer. The offences occurred at Garrett Saturday night late.

With another fellow Newbauer was drunk and disorderly and Ninht Marshall Rowe attempted to arrest the fellows. One of the men ran, but Newbauer stood his ground and showed fight. The officer tackled him and for a time the two had a regular rough and tumble fight. Marshal Rowe, however, came out first and best and landed his man in the Garrett station house.

Sheriff Ralph Thomas went over to Garrett and brought him here. At his hearing in the court of Justice Green he pleaded guilty to both charges and the justice fined him $10 and costs for resisting an officer, and $1 and costs for drunkenness, or $30.50 in all. Newbauer could not pay and went to jail.—Monday's Courier.

SUES FOR DIVORCE

Catherine Grubaugh Asks Separation From Ephriam Grubaugh and $1,000 Alimony

Frank A. Brink has brought suit in the circuit court asking that his client, Catherine Grubaugh, may be given a divorce from Ephriam Grubaugh. She also asks alimony in the sum of $1,000. She alleges that defendant has real estate in Fort Wayne, a house and lot, worth $4,000, and considerable personal property.

The complaint says that the parties were married on May 2, 1904, and lived together until June 15, 1909, when defendant left plaintiff. The cause for divorce alleged is failure to support.

THE INJUNCTION CASE BEING ARGUED TODAY

Special finding of facts in the Cook vs. the City of Butler case to enjoin the city from paying the sewer contractors the excess over and above the statitory inibation of two per cent of the city's assessed valuation, will be argued upon the special finding of facts, today (Friday) after which the court will render a decision. Should the court find that the city is indebted in excess of its assessed valuation, the constitution provides that the excess is void.

In view of the street arguments that the excess will be reassessed to the property holders, we have gone to the trouble to make some little investigation and feel safe in predicting that the contractors will have to lose that amount, as every man is presumed to know the law, and especially so when dealing with a municipal corporation. We do not look upon it as a burden to the contractors, as the contract price for the completion of the sewer was $47,500.00 and they were allowed $2,,800.61 for "extras" while $3000 was added for attorney's fees and incidentals.

Mr. Cook, in behalf of the tax payers, through his attorneys, E. B. Dunten and and John Yeagley, has brought this action to enjoin the city from making these payments.

PRIMARY ELECTION AT FORT WAYNE

In the closest primary election in the political history of Fort Wayne, August M. Schmidt, present city comptroller, was made the democratic nominee for mayor, winning over his nearest competitor, Charles McCulloch, by the narrow margin of four votes in a total of 6,30C votes cast.

Jesse Grice was the nominee of the republieans and he was an easy winner. The republicans cast less than 2,300 votes and Grice was a four to one winner, receiving 1,812 to Skelton's 487.

The vote on the democratic candidates for mayor was: Schmidt, 1,875; McCulloch, 1,871; Scherer, 1,507; Melching, 1,091. The vote on republican candidates for mayor was: Grice, 1,812; Skelton, 487.

For city clerk the democrats nominated David C. Stout and the republicans William T. Jeffries; for police judge, the democrats, Wm. Fruchtenicht; republicans, J. Frank Mungovan. A councilmanic ticket was also nominated by both parties.

LETTER FROM SPOKANE, WASH.

Spokane, Wash., July 19, 1909.

MR WM. KENAN, Butler, Ind.

Dear Sir and Friend—I thought you might like to hear from me in regard to my trip. I will write a few lines today, as you know I left Butler on June 27, arrived in St. Paul on the morning of the 29th and found it booming. I left that city on the following day and arrived at Fargo, North Dakota, the same day and stopped over until next day, took a car for Grand Fork, thence to Devils Lake, North Dakota, arrived there on July 1, and stayed with Mr. R. Goer, my cousin. I found him busy in court as he is an attorney and court was in session

The family and I went over to the Chautauqua. That is five miles from the city. We set up our tent and had a glorious good time, as there was a large theatre on the grounds and a change of program every night. I stayed there until the 10th, then took the car for Kallaspell, Montana, stopped over night at Minot, North Dakota, took train next morning arriving at Columbia Falls at 10:15, changed cars and arrived at Kallaspell at 11:30. I stopped over until alter the registration which was on the 15th. Meanwhile I went to a lumber town by the name of Sumers at the north end of Flathead lake. There I took the steamer and went to Polston where the squatters town is. It is located on the Flathead reservation. Last spring there were only three houses at that place, and now there is over 700 and would have been more than three times as many if the government officials had not stopped them from building any more. There will be no more there until the lots are all sold by the government.

I was out over the Flathead reservation and found some good land and some very poor. There is only one chance in one thousand for a man to get anything worth having. It will not pay any person to spend money or time on any of the reservation. I have registered in all of them, but have little hopes of getting anything worth living on. If a man has a good farm or not so good a one out there and wants to live on a farm he had better keep it, as he has no risk to run out there to what he has in the western countries. If a man is no good misrepresenting things and expects to make it win he had better not come west. The shark is the only man for this country. Buy and sell and beat your friend or anyone you can is the motto here. You hear about gold mines; they are here, but the rich man has a cinch on them all. It is the same on the timber lands and you might as well say the same on all things. Spokane is a chep place to live in a way of speaking for this country—as a usual thing everything is high. This place is not any higher priced than our own city.

I expect to stay here until the 1st of September. I will go on to Seattle, stop for a short time, then go on to Portland, returning to Butler some time in November There are hundreds of people registering for lands that will not take them when they see them.

Very truly yours,
C. R. SAWYER.

LAKE SHORE MAKES IMPORTANT SHIFT

The most radical and important change since the Lake Shore was doubletracked was made the first of this week when the western division of the road from Elkhart to Chicago, was changed from a left hand to a right hand system. Over 700 men were engaged in the work, 130 men changing switches and tracks, 350 on signals and many other section men, switch tenders, target men and others, all working in harmony and like clock work. The division from Elkhart to Toledo has not yet been changed.—Kendallville Daily News.

A New Firm

H. H. Aldrich and Charles Aldrich, of Hamilton, have purchased the implement stock and good will of Wm. Mutzfeld & Sons and will move here and conduct an implement store in the Husselman building on the corner of Broadway and Main streets.

They are recommended as trustworthy and hustling young business men and we hope to see them do a flourishing business.

Mutzfeld & Sons will retain the buggy business which they will run in connection with their harness shop.

Bucklen Has His Troubles

Suit for the condemnation of a parcel of land, about three miles east of Elkhart, which the St. Joseph Valley Traction company desires for a right of way, has been started in the circuit court at Goshen. Attorney James H. State represents the company.

The defendants are Albert S. Starr and others. It is stated by counsel for the traction company that it has been impossible to reach an agreement as to the price of the land. The court has been asked to name appraisers.

Construction of the traction road has now progressed to a point near the land owned by Starr and others who are parties to the suit and the company is desirous of having the right of way dispute settled in order to avoid delays in completing the road to Bristol.

A similar case is pending in the Steuben county courts and will probably be heard at the fall term of court.

Jesse Wagner is reported on the sick list.

HUNTINGTON BREWERY

May Be Moved to This City and Erect New Plant

A report emanating from Huntington, states that in the event of the supreme court not holding the local option law unconstitution, the Huntington brewery, of that city, will be moved to Fort Wayne. It is stated further, on the authority of Henry Hoch, a member of the firm of the Huntington brewery, that thirty of the best saloon keepers of this city will be stockholders in the concern if it moves to this place. Mr. Hoch is quoted as saying that the plant will be erected in this city under the name of the "Consumers' Brewing company."

The reason for moving to Fort Wayne is the fact that Huntington county recently voted "dry," and as the Huntington brewery is a relatively small concern, a situation in a "dry" county is extremely undesirable. By removing to this city the firm could get the benefit of the Allen county trade, which would be much larger than the business that could be controlled by a small brewery in a "dry" county.—News.

THE NEW LAUNDRY IN OPERATION

Upon paying the New Process laundry a visit we find that it has been equipped with new machinery throughout. The equipment consists of a gas heating plant, a large compound domestic ironer which will iron over buttons without injuring the same and leave the garment as smooth as a ribbon; an edger heated by gas which smoothes the edges of collars and shirt bands perfectly. Passing over this machine the collars go to the shaper, which is a hot iron tube that shapes them ready for wear.

Mr. Vernier has spent quite a snug sum of money securing the best machinery possible, so that Butler has one of the best equipped laundries in this part of the state. The HERALD wishes to congratulate the enterprising proprietor upon the effort he has put forth to give the people up-to-date work.

Mormans at Garrett

A number of Morman preachers visited Garrett last Saturday and Sunday and propounded the gospel from the street corner. The substanse of their belief is as follows:

The proper name of the church is the Church of Jesus of Latter Day Saints, established by divine direction, its name was prescribed by him whose church it is, Jesus the Christ. Its message is the restoration of the gospel. Its religion is founded on the revelation of God.

The theology of the church is the theology taught by Christ and His apostles, the theology of saripture and reason. It not only acknowledges the sacredness of ancient scripture and the binding force of divinely inspired acts and utterances in ages past; but also declares that God now speaks to man, through prophets in this day raised up to usher in the "Dispensation of the Fullness of Time."

We believe in the free agency of man, and therefore in his individual responsibility; that man will be punished for his own sins, not for Adam's transgression, and that salvation is for no select few, but that all men may be saved through obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

While here many subjects of interest will be taken up and discussed. After each meeting free literature will be distributed. Come to our meetings and hear us represent ourselves. The truth is not too good for any. Paul said, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

Wedding Chimes

Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Shafer, in Edon, Ohio, occurred the marriage of their daughter, Mary V., to Mr. Fred H. Aldrich, of Hamilton, Ind., in the presence of parents, grandparents, sisters and brothers of the bride and groom, Michael Yeagle pastor of the Methodist church officiating.

The house was nicely decorated and a bountiful wedding feast was participated in by all.

These young people are well known, the bride being the oldest daughter of Postmaster Shafer and the groom the son of a well known DeKalb county farmer. The best wishes of their many friends go with them through their married life.

Robert Arford Reunion

On July 25, 1909, all members of Robert Arford's family, except Floyd Tinstman, Marion Mumma and Samuel Haverstock, met at Big Run Sunday school. After Sunday school Mrs. Belle Tinstman made a short talk from personal reminiscence. The two great grandsons, Robert and Charles, aged two and four, born in the Philippine Island, were introduced. Mrs. Fostoria Mumma made an address from her experience and work as a missionary in the Philippines. Mrs. L. A. Macklin talked of personal reminiscenee and missionary work. An offering was taken for the Church Erection Society of the Philippine U. B. confeseence, amounting to $13 50. They went to the old home for dinner and were royally entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Dilgard, its present occupants. Rev. G. P. Macklin preached to a good audience in the evening at the church. The reunion was a success.

Drug Store Goods That You want When You want them

The reason why we do so much business is as simple as one, two, three---the things most wanted are here when wanted.

Take for instance vacation wants---the myriad of things that were wanted in a hurry, all in a single week or two. You didn't need to wait until Geddes' Drug Store got them in, they were here when wanted.

And so on, we might go through the entire list of Drug Store Goods, and show how natural it is to have things wanted when wanted.

The health of Mrs. Countryman has been reported not so good lately.

Mrs. John Hook is in poor health again. Mr. Beaver's daughter is doing her house work.

Mrs. Schramm recently went to Fort Wayne to have a surgical operation performed. She is getting along very well.

Mr. Macklin and family, of Dayton, Ohio, are visiting with Chas. Arford and wife and other relatives in this locality.

George DeVinney and his best girl recently attended an ice cream social at Norris church, five miles east of Auburn.

Oat harvest has been progressing for a few days, and many fields make a fine show of shocks and a good yield is anticipated.

Many farmers are still making hay this week, but as the grass is overripe the quality of the hay will not be first-class in many fields.

The many friends of Mrs. John Barber, of near Adrian, Mich., will be sorry to hear that her health has been quite poorly again lately.

The picnic held in Wartenbee's grove on the 17th inst. was not very well attended on account of harvest work which needed attention very much.

It is said that Joseph Wilson finished cutting his wheat Wednesday of last week and threshed it on Saturday. This was certainly quick work so far as Mr. Wilson's wheat harvest was concerned.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gunsenhouser deeply sympathize with them on account of the recent mental condition of their two sons, John and Ernest.

We hear that there is to be a picnic in Hamilton's grove next Sunday. It is a pleasant place near the St. Joe rives about half way between Newville and the town of St. Joe. A good attendance is expected.

The threshing machines are very busy these fine days and the wheat is yielding much better than many thought it would. The greatest yield heard of by the writer is thirty bushels per acre.

The many friends of Mr. Kenan regret to part with him as their editor, but wish him success in the future where ever he may locate. They also wish the new editor of the HERALD success in his undertaking and that, if possible, the paper may become still better.

Took All the Cash from Bank.

The First National Bank of Tipton, Ind., one of the old financial institutions of Northern Indiana, is closed and its assistant cashier, Noah R. Marker, has disappeared, taking with him between $50,000 and $60,000, which was all the cash that was in the bank's vaults. Marker, after sweeping together the money, set the time lock on the safe so that it could not be opened for some time and left on a traction car for Indianapolis. Marker left a note on the desk of his brother, William Marker, cashier of the bank, saying that he had gone forever and that he had taken "enough money to pay his expenses." The fact that he had emptied the cash box of nearly $80,000 was not known until the time lock gave admittance to the vault. Whether or not Marker had previously taken money from the bank's funds and had covered up the defalcations by making false entries in the books cannot be learned until the arrival of a national bank examiner.

Robert Pitcairn Is Dead.

Robert Pitcairn is dead. He passed away quietly at his home, "Carincarque," Ellsworth and Amberson avenues, Shadyside, Pa., surrounded by members of his family. Mr. Pitcairn was in his seventy-fourth year. Three years ago he retired as resident assistant to the president of the Pennsylvania railroad. However, he continued in business for himself. One year ago he started to decline physically, although he retained his bright mental activity. His breakdown was rapid, and three months ago friends realized that death was a matter of a few weeks. He came from Scotland when a boy and went to work in a store. His lifelong friend and boyhood companion, Andrew Carnegie, was at that time working in Pittsburg as a messenger boy, and he induced Mr. Pitcairn to give up his place in the store and take a position on the messenger force. This was really the beginning of the life which afterward turned out so brilliantly.

GALVESTON IS SAVED BY ITS NEW SEA WALL

Hurricane Attacks City, but Barrier Keeps Out Waters of Gulf of Mexico.

NOT ONE LIFE LOST IN CITY

City Practically Assured of Immunity from Disaster Like That of 1900.

Attacked by a hurricane almost as severe as that which killed thousands of persons and practically wrecked every building in the city, Galveston on Wednesday weathered the storm with a loss of life thought to have been only sixteen, and without greater property loss than would have attended the storm had it struck any other city of equal size.

Not a life was lost in Galveston proper, so far as is known, but the hurricane demolished a new tarpon fishing pier on the north jetty, across the bay, six miles from the city. It was here that the fatalities occurred, and it is thought that there were only thirteen guests on the pier. These perished, with Capt. Bettison, the manager, and his wife and daughter. Fifty other fishermen had a narrow escape from the fate that overtook the guests at the new pier.

Galveston is assured now of its practical immunity from another disaster like that of 1900. A general feeling of confidence has resulted from the splendid action of the sea wall, which resisted the onslaught of the sea, backed by the hurricane which beat in vain on the concrete wall seventeen feet high surrounding the city on the gulf side of the island.

WEST NEEDS 50,000 MEN.

Appeals for Harvest Help Heard at National Capital.

A cry for help to harvest the season's crops comes from the West to officials of the Department of Commerce and Labor in Washington, one of whose duties is to find employment wherever possible for the throngs of aliens who come to this country. Fifty thousand able-bodied men are wanted badly by the farmers, says Representative Stevens of Minnesota, who has been in conference with Assistant Secretary McHarg and other officials of the department. Mr. Stevens says the West is literally begging for help to gather the large wheat and other crops.

Although the officials are more than willing to assist, they are not able to do much because of the almost penniless conditions of many immigrants. Mr. McHarg is heartily in favor of the suggestion of Commissioner Williams at the Ellis Island station that immigrants should possess at least $25 on landing to prevent their becoming public charges. He believes that the problem of relieving the congested centers could be solved by the railroads if they offered to transport passengers at actual cost to sections where profitable employment could be found. The railroads would profit in the end, he declares, because they would carry back the product of the aliens' labor.

WOMEN FIGHT WOLF PACK.

Mother and Daughter Found Exhausted After Battle for Life.

Exhausted and on the verge of collapse from their harrowing experience, Mrs. W. J. Geoker, wife of the Salt Lake Railway station agent at Crestline, thirty miles east of San Bernardino, Cal., and her 11-year-old daughter, have reached their home after a two-day battle with a pack of wolves. For forty-eight hours they had been imprisoned in a lonely cabin on a deserted sheep ranch eighteen miles from home by the hungry wolves. While the husband and father, aided by a gang of 150 section hands, ordered out by the division superintendent, searched for them, the women were beating off with clubs the attacks of the wolves which tried to get at them by tearing off the sides of the cabin and digging under its foundations. The mother and daughter were found totally exhausted. They had sustained themselves with a few crusts of hard bread found in the hut.

1,000,000 RAIN HITS DULUTH.

City Is Flooded by the Second Storm of Twenty-four Hours.

Duluth was flooded in the night Wednesday for the second time in twenty-four hours, and the damage may reach $1,000,000. The damage to streets alone will be several hundred thousand dollars. Scores of basements are flooded. Two and three-fifths inches of rain fell in about an hour and a half. The avenues were rivers. The water ran both ways on Superior street and for several blocks each side of Lake avenue. The water was two feet deep on the sidewalk on the lower side of Superior street. The water poured into the floor of the Bijou Theater, where a performance was in progress, and a panic was narrowly averted. The street car service was demoralized. The St. Louis Hotel basement had seven feet of water in it and the house was in darkness. Automobiles were abandoned in the streets for the night.

PRIEST BEATS BISHOP IN SUIT.

Court's Ruling Allows Father Murphy to Hold Services in Nebraska.

Several weeks ago Bishop Bonacum appeared before District Judge Dungan and secured a temporary order restraining Father Murphy from holding services in Ulysses or in any other Catholic diocese of Lincoln, Neb. The hearing came before Judge Dungan, and he not only refused to grant permanent injunction, but refused a supersedeas bond. The decision permits Father Murphy to hold services at any place in the diocese. After the decision, and after receiving congratulations, he announced that he will say mass in his old Ulysses church. The bishop will appeal to the Supreme Court.

The company's officials had promised an increase as soon as business would warrant. No demand was made by the workmen.

STORM DEAD TWENTY-ONE.

Fourteen Missing Along Gulf Coast and Property Damage $750,000.

Twenty-one reported dead, fourteen missing, ten injured and a property loss totaling $750,000 is the result of the storm which raged over the southern coast of Texas Wednesday. Of those missing, thirteen are the members of the families of three brothers Abernathy, who left High Island Tuesday, intending to go to Sabine Pass. They traveled by wagon and were to camp out on the beach during Tuesday night, resuming their journey Wednesday. Part of their equipment has been found, the animals which drew the wagon drowned, but searching parties have found no trace of the three men, their wives or the seven children who made up the party. The storm practically demolished the town of Velasco, but only one life was lost.

Clemenceau Ministry Goes Down to Defeat Suddenly in Vote.

The Clemenceau cabinet fell suddenly Tuesday night under dramatic circumstances, at the conclusion of a violent debate in the French Chamber of Deputies over the naval scandals, extending over several days. On a vote of confidence in the government the vote stood 176 in favor and 212 opposed.

M. Clemenceau and his fellow ministers immediately left the chamber. The premier proceeded directly to President Fallieres and offered his resignation, which the President accepted. M. Delcasse, chairman of the investigating commission, had led the attack upon the naval administration, especially that during the incumbency of M. Pelletan and M. Thomson, former ministers of marine.

Long Branch Fire Swept.

Fire swept across the southern part of the business section of Long Branch, N. J., and caused $100,000 damage. Starting in a livery stable near Second avenue, the flames spread rapidly to frame structures on both sides, destroying a dozen buildings. None of these, however, were of great value, with the exception of the Coulter House, which had not been opened this season. No one was seriously injured.

ERIE TRAIN IS HELD UP.

Wild West Tactics Used Successfully Just Outside of Gotham.

Reports of a hold-up of passengers on an Erie Railroad train in which western-bound immigrants were the victims, reached New York Friday night. The reports came from Middletown, N. Y., and said that the hold-up occurred just after the train had left the Bergen tunnel in New Jersey. The train is known as the Western Express and leaves Jersey City at 12:10 a. m.

The varying reports of the affair say that either one or two men stepped into the first of two day coaches bound west and, holding the passengers at bay with revolvers, stripped them of money and valuables. Before the train crew discovered that there had been a robbery, it is said, the train was almost at Middletown, N. Y., the first stop after leaving Jersey City. The robber or robbers in the meantime had made good their escape.

While the robbers were at work there was a wild scene in the car. The men, women and children, just landed in a strange country and unable to make themselves understood, became panic-stricken when the robbers covered them with revolvers and compelled them to turn over their property. Many of the women fainted, while the children added their cries to the uproar.

SHEA MAY GET 25 YEARS.

Former Head of Teamsters Found Guilty of Attempt to Murder.

Cornelius P. Shea, 36 years old, of 222 West 13th street, New York, formerly president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, who led the big teamsters' strike in Chicago, was convicted of attempted murder by a jury in special sessions before Judge Foster in that city. The prosecuting witness was Miss Alice Walsh, 24 years old. Shea's crime was one of the most brutal on record. He met Miss Walsh while leading the strike in Chicago and brought her back to New York with him. He quarreled with her in the apartment house at 223 West 13th street on May 21 and stabbed her more than twenty-seven times with a pocket knife. The woman nearly died from the severity of her wounds, but at last recovered and brought action against her assailant. The maximum punishment for the crime of which Shea was convicted is twenty-five years in prison.

FROM $5,000 A YEAR TO THIEF.

New York Man Finds Banker's Life Too Quiet, So Turns Burglar.

When Ralph Sherman was caught at Far Rockaway with rich loot taken from the home of Reuben Sadowsky he confessed to the police that in six years he had fallen from the position of foreign correspondent for the firm of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, bankers at 13 William street, New York, receiving $5,000 a year, to the crimes of a burglar. Sherman is 27 years old, and speaks seven languages. In the police station-house a gold watch and six stickpins were found in his possession. As he said, he had turned burglar because he was tired of a quiet life in a bank.

NON-UNION SLAYER ACQUITTED.

Police and Coroner Find Cleveland Killing Was Justified.

James G. Purvis, of Detroit, Mich., the non-union marine engineer who killed two strikers, injured one other and barely escaped with his life at the hands of strike sympathizers who attempted to lynch him in Cleveland on a recent night, was discharged by both the police and the county coroner. The official found that Purvis acted in self-defense only.

Senator Tillman pleads for a duty on tea to assist the tea growers of South Carolina.

The placing of petroleum on the free list by a substantial majority of the Senate apparently has not taken all of the fight out of the independent oil producers, and another effort in the direction of protection for this industry will be made when the tariff bill shall have been perfected in the committee of the whole and reported to the Senate.

Senator La Follette has issued a formal analysis of the Aldrich bill from the insurgent viewpoint, based on the figures prepared by treasury experts. From these he estimates that the increases over the House bill would affect imports to the value of $146,125,000, while the decreases in the Senate bill would affect imports to the value of $93,525,000, using the business of 1907 as the standard.

It has been reserved for the American suffragettes at New York to originate some novel methods of summer campaigning. During the week two militant leaders have invaded the business section of the city with a street piano or hurdy-gurdy to attract attention to the literature which they wished to distribute, and a tambourine in which to collect pennies. Down in Wall street the women agitators met with a hostile reception and were compelled to retire.

The President discussed with his cabinet the question of the census patronage in the South. It was agreed that the policy would be to make these appointments without regard to political affiliations, but the appointees to be men of standing in their places of residence.

Since the meeting of the President and Gov. Hughes during the Lake Champlain celebration, the rumor has been given great credence to the effect that a tender of the first vacancy on the Supreme bench was made to the Governor by Mr. Taft. Friends of Hughes think it doubtful that he would accept the place in the near future.

Work of Congress

The Senate was not in session Monday. Having gotten over its baseball "spree" of the previous Friday, the House transacted a general assortment of business. It began by passing an omnibus bridge bill, then listened to an apology by Mr. Hobson, of Alabama, for having last February made some uncomplimentary statements about Ambassador O'Brien at Tokio, and further considered the urgent deficiency bill. There were several lively tilts, one of which culminated in an announcement by Mr. Macon of Arkansas that he would resign his seat if it could be proved that he was a legislative obstructor. The most serious discussion centered about Francis J. Heney, special assistant to the Attorney General. Chairman Tawney, of the Appropriations Committee, made the statement that Mr. Heney had received during the last year $23,000 for services he did not render.

When the Senate met Tuesday Senator Brown of Nebraska sought to have adopted the joint resolution directing the Secretary of State to transmit to the Governors of the various States copies of the resolution providing for a constitutional amendment authorizing the levying of an income tax, but under objection from Senator Kean consideration was postponed a day under the agreement to transact no business while the tariff bill is in conference. Mr. Cummins, after some debate, obtained an order for reprinting a bill in which he was interested. Senator Smoot objected, but finally withdrew his objection. Without transacting other business the Senate adjourned until Friday. The urgent deficiency bill was passed by the House after four days of tempestuous debate. The amount carried by it is $454,809, or $20,408 more than the original sum, and includes the $25,000 traveling expenses for the President. After denying the usual extra month's pay to officers and employes of the capitol, the House threw out of the bill the allowance for extra work to committee stenographers and then refused to carry out a mandate of the United States Supreme Court for the payment of J. M. Ceballos & Co. of New York of $205,614. Finally the Democrats, led by Mr. Bowers of Mississippi, sought to defeat the proposition for the payment of the President's traveling expenses, but in that they were unsuccessful. Adjournment was taken until Friday noon.

After a session of little more than half an hour Friday the Senate adjourned until Monday, which is a day earlier than would have been possible under the unanimous agreement for sessions only on each third day while the tariff bill is in conference. The date was moved up in the hope that the conference report on the tariff bill might be in shape to be presented by Monday. The Senate also listened to a statement by Mr. Culberson that the Democrats had been united on the tariff bill. A large number of presidential nominations were confirmed, including that of Charles R. Crane to be minister to China. In an exciting session in the House Mr. Macon (Ark.) referred to his recent colloquy with Mr. Rucker (Colo.), and charged that the Colorado member had inserted in the Congressional Record certain references to him that had not been uttered. Mr. Macon also objected to the words "great applause." Mr. Rucker entered a general denial, but the Speaker declared the motion to strike the passages from the Record carried. Mr. Randall (Texas), wanted the Speaker to name a committee to consider bills prohibiting members of Congress and court officers from accepting gifts or employment from corporations, trusts or persons interested in legislation. At 1:05 p. m. the House adjourned till Tuesday noon.

Lesson of the Pittsburg Survey.

Reviewing the "Pittsburg Survey" in an article for the April American Magazine, Ida Tarbell says: "This survey is the most awful arraignment of an American institution and its resulting class pronounced since the days of slavery. It puts upon the Pittsburg millionaire the stamp of greed, of stupidity and of heartless pride. But what should we expect of him? He is the creature of a special privilege which for years he has not needed. He has fought for it because he has fattened on it. He must have it for labor. But look at him and look at his labor and believe him if you can." In conclusion she says: "Justice takes a terrible revenge upon those who thrive by privilege. The curse of justice on those who will not recognize injustice, is the sodden mind, the dulled vision, the unfeeling heart."

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Midsummer trade conditions are sufficiently gratifying to support the feeling of optimism which spreads throughout the lines of activity. Some increase in trading defaults is noted, but this does not detract from the healthy significance of high solvent payments through the banks, ideal crop prospects and heavier operations in factory production and distribution. Wider demands for money indicate that business generally revives under renewed vigor and confidence, and it is not surprising that preparations for the future are substantiated by many heavy demands, involving more drawing upon capacity of the leading industries. Seasonable weather has brought numerous buyers into the markets for general merchandise, furniture, hardware and machinery, and all reports testify to increasing consumption of raw supplies and adequate reduction of retail stocks here and in the interior.

Steel car building gains in this district and more hands are engaged at the mills and forges. Outputs now reach greater aggregate in implements, electric appliances, heavy forgeries, leather and wood working, and the current demands in these branches come from more numerous sources. Movements of raw materials reflect improvement in ore, copper, lumber, cement and wool, but there is decrease in hides and the principal supply for packing.

Bank clearings, $259,703,400, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 18.9 per cent, and compare with $230,259,187 in 1907. Failures reported in Chicago district number 37, against 29 last week, 35 in 1908 and 29 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 12 last week, 8 in 1908 and 3 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement in the crops, rather better advices as to ultimate outcome of the leading cereals, easing in prices of breadstuffs consequent thereon or because of larger wheat crop movement, a good distribution at retail under the stimulus of clearance sales and a slight enlargement of fall trade with jobbers and wholesalers are the leading features this week. Connected therewith in some degree are the advices from leading industries of enlargement of output, of a continuance of the upward tendency in values of manufactured goods, a larger demand for money for crop moving purposes, and a perceptible increase in the friction visible between employers and employes in a number of lines. This latter is a natural phenomena of the industrial situation, possibly made more noticeable this year by reason of the high level of prices of commodities and the consequent cost of living.

Another rise in the price of crude rubber to $1.85 per pound—an advance of 37 cents since July 1, and of 91 cents over July 1 a year ago—has made the position of rubber manufacturers difficult.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 22 were 239, against 296 last week, 263 in the like week of 1908, 155 in 1907, 171 in 1906 and 197 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week number 24, as compared with 36 last week and 24 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

A Hazard of Hearts

"I don't know that there is any excitement, only—there was something I felt that I must say to you at once. Captain Kerr came to me a little while ago, and was asking me most kindly about my plans, and if he could help me in any way. He asked me to come and stay with his wife, and to give him my Paris address.

"I hope you reminded him of the man in Chicago who made a large fortune by minding his own business."

Mathilde was too intent on her own line of thought to smile.

"I did nothing of the sort. I thanked him sincerely for what I am sure was pure kindness."

"And you gave him the address?" Stewart's voice had in it an echo of carefully restrained wrath.

"No, I gave him the address of a pension where I have stayed, but where they know nothing of my movements now."

Stewart laughed. "A much more feminine method of saying the same thing."

"Well, 'will you have the kindness, then, to tell me what else you expected me to do?' she retorted, with warmth.

"Our little altercation really sounds quite matrimonial," he commended; then—"I think you acted with the tact and discretion which I should have expected," he went on soothingly. "But now, what comes next?" for he was quick to see that she had not yet approached the main issue.

"Next is a new aspect of affairs which has just dawned upon me, and which, if you cannot prove my view to be incorrect, will cause me to give up the whole thing at once. I was a fool not to see it before." She was speaking in a low, intense tone, and unconsciously quickened her steps as she went on. "Do you remember my saying the other day that Captain Kerr had told me that you were a married man. Well, if he is under that impression, other people out there must be so as well. That was what the missionary told your home people. It is hardly to be supposed that we can always successfully avoid everyone who has ever been there. Well then, when they meet me, what do they think me?"

Mr. Stewart remained unmoved under this flow of words.

"I am sorry that I failed the other day in making you understand matters more clearly," he said, gravely. "Your first premises are altogether wrong. Nobody in my own neighborhood dreams that I was ever married. They all knew her"—since hearing Mathilde Thorne's name he had never spoken of the "habitant" woman by that name—"to be the wife of Antoine, the lumberman. By some strange chance the missionary picked up a different story, but he could not have gone away with that impression if he had been anything save a wanderer, here to-day and gone to-morrow. He certainly never was at my house, or saw either of us."

"That does not account for Captain Kerr——" she interrupted; but, with a checking movement of his hand, he went on:

"I think that if you search your memory, you will probably find that this was what happened: Kerr, who, however, was never but once in my part of the country, most probably knew the whole story, but in talking with you most probably let out something about my home life which he could explain in no other hypothesis than that of my being a married man. There are few men who would give another away by letting out the truth, so he did what nine men in ten would have done, cast the veil of respectability over my domestic arrangements. Don't you think that it came about in something of that fashion?"

Mathilde pondered a moment, as they tramped steadily along, the mist driving in their faces.

"Yes, I rather fancy that it did happen in some such fashion," she agreed thoughtfully. "I remember that he was talking of the isolation of households, and instanced the graves that are seen near some of the homesteads as an embodiment of all the solitude of the land. When I rode up to Stewart's door at Prairie Dell, the white cross over his child's grave on the hill gave me a chill at the heart, for fear such a cross should mark my door,' he said; and then I asked him if you were married."

"And he answered rather dryly that I was?"

"Exactly so."

"There, you see, I guessed rightly."

"Perhaps so, but I should feel much happier if I were certain about it."

Stewart meditated a bit before he said: "Very well, then; I will settle it with him before we leave the ship."

"Not in connection with me," she said, with quick alarm.

"Your name shall not be mentioned in the matter," he promised, then went on more gravely: "I really think it would be better for both if you could bring yourself to see that it is as much against my interest as yours, for any slur to come upon your fame in the matter."

"How am I to tell," she broke out wildly, "what are your real interests or plans in the affair."

They had instinctively paused, and stood facing each other.

"If that is how you really feel," he said, "it would indeed be better to give up the whole idea." Then, with a sudden change to his gentler manner, he added: "Don't be so hard on me; I'm sure that after all you trust me a little more than you say. Come, shake hands on it, won't you?" And, rather to her own surprise, Mathilde found herself placing her hand, or rather her fur mitt, in his.

The next morning Stewart seized a passing chance to tell her that he had ascertained that Captain Kerr knew him to be an unmarried man, but no leading remark of Mathilde's had power to bring force any details of the interview, save that there had no mention of her name in the matter.

To her sensitive watchfulness it seemed as though, at lunch, Captain Kerr's manner had lost some of its friendliness, but it was the last day of the voyage, and the routine of the friendly, leisurely sea life was over, so that she had no opportunity to make sure of the fact. In the morning there was the excitement of the half-hour's tarrying in Moville harbor to land the mails.

The afternoon was occupied with the business of packing, paying wine bills, and all such small endings to the voyage, for the captain expected to catch the midnight tide at the Liverpool bar, and to land his passengers at daybreak.

The Liverpool docks are never a very cheerful place, and they certainly were not at their best in the late December dawn, in that chill drizzle with which Liverpool generally greets the wanderer.

Stewart had spoken his last confidential word to Mathilde: "It's better for me to wait and come up by the next train. I will come to you to-morrow afternoon at Chelsea. If anything should happen sooner, wire me at the Metropole. Let Charlie Hudson go up to town with you."

Charlie Hudson had asked nothing better, and had fairly beamed with radiancy as the two sat over breakfast together in the dining-room of the Lime Street Hotel.

At the first thought Mathilde was dismayed to find that he had taken first-class tickets, but then, with a sudden laugh, she recollected that it did not matter. She need no longer hoard her little store, for her present supply would hold out until her marriage, and then, after that—was it the deluge?

She parted with Charlie Hudson at Euston—that place of partings—and the boy looked rather rueful as he held her hand at the cab door.

"I must go down to my people to-night as soon as I have had my hair cut and ordered some clothes, but perhaps I could come up and see you in a few days.' The latter part of the sentence was added tentatively.

"It's no use," she responded cheerfully; "I shall be off to Paris as soon as possible. We had better say good-bye now."

"But you will write?" he asked eagerly.

"Oh, yes, I will write. Good-bye," and she smiled her farewell, while he watched the cab driving off.

"There," she said to herself, "that is over. I wonder what comes next."

"Next" was a welcome amount of physical comfort in a warm bath, and a subsequent sup of tea by a good fire. Who that has not made a winter voyage can understand the joy contained in those words!

The short day had darkened, and the deficiencies of the plain little lodging-house room were hidden in the kindly cheer of the firelight.

The comfort of wearing a soft silk teagown instead of the perpetual weight of heavy wraps; the sense of sole possession of even that small room, after ten days of the close gregariousness of ship life; the mere glow and warmth of the firelight—these were enough to give a sensation of well-being that was akin to cheerfulness.

That was the life that she had been contemplating—a solitary fireside after a day's work. With the late regret that we give to what is ended, she saw now the good side of such a life; the absolute freedom, the peaceful work. Her mind, which she had thought quite determined, was, all of a sudden, struggling again in a sea of doubt.

An hour had passed before she rose, with the uncertain step of one just off rolling seas, and sitting down at the table, wrote off quickly a letter to Mrs. Silas P. Stark, Boulevard Clichy, Paris. She said how much she regretted that family circumstances had unexpectedly occurred which would make it more advisable for her to go on with her art studies in London than in Paris, and offered, if she had put her friend to any financial inconvenience, to compensate her for it.

Then, with the indifference of one who had burned her boats, she pulled up her chair to the fire, and began to study with inferest the fashions in the bundle of papers which Charlie Hudson had bought for her.

CHAPTER VII.

It is a common enough experience with those whose path leads them down to the sea in ships to find that the intimate unconventional friendship of the deck is placed on an entirely different footing by the mere resumption of shore clothes and habits. The man in the tall hat, the woman in the new bonnet and town dress seem to require a more ceremonious treatment than did the same two people bundled in a miscellaneous assortment of last winter's wraps. Out of the stress of complicated sensations Mathilde had forgotten to include the new mutual attitude as a very probable factor in her first meeting with Stewart. It was there though, as she at once realized the next afternoon when her door opened to admit him. True, his turnout might not have passed muster in Piccadilly, for the smartest of tailors cannot perform instantaneous results; but the trimmed hair, stiff white collar replacing the flannel one, new hat, gloves and overcoat were enough to produce a very different effect, and it was with a pang of dismay that Mathilde realized what a complete stranger he was to her. Mingled with the dismay at their mutual standing was an impersonal impression of admiration.

Mathilde had seen enough of the world to know that nowhere, under any circumstances, could this man be mistaken for other than he was—one used from his birth to rule and to lead, secure in his own self-reliance, embittered, perhaps, by his experience of life, but showing it only in the stoical indifference with which he met everything that fate sent him. A strong man individually, strengthened by the habits and instincts of his class, would his strength be to her a tower of refuge, or a heavy hand to crush? Stewart seemed to read the scrutiny and doubt in her eyes.

"Well," he said, smiling as he held her hand, "and what do you think of me in my shore rig-out?" Then, seeing her embarrassment, "Never mind, you needn't tell me. Let me say, instead, how much I am impressed by yours."

Mathilde was still in the street dress which she had worn during the day, a plain, tailor-made black cloth. With one of the subtle little feminine fancies as to some small point of attire in one of life's crises, she had left on her hat, feeling as though the outdoor dress took away somewhat from the intimacy of this first real tete-a-tete.

"You look fairly comfortable here," Stewart went on, with a scrutinizing glance around. "And you are going to give me some tea, and let me sit by the fire a bit, aren't you?" Then, as they were seated, he added: "Heavens, what a comfort it is to feel that one can speak out without looking over one's shoulder to see if Kerr or Hudson are within earshot! And there is such a lot to say!"

There was, indeed, much to say—the minutiae of plans which he had matured since their last confabulation. One of these plans was the obtaining of a maid, which he pronounced necessary, "or else Mrs. Herbert would say in her honoyed voice, 'You must let me find you a nice, reliable woman, my dear,' and there you might be settled with a spy of hers in your pocket."

"But if I got a maid now she would know everything."

"Oh, you must not get her until you are at the Metropole. I will speak to the manager to-day about my wife wanting one when she comes to town. They always know about people. Don't you think that a French woman, with a mere smattering of English, would be best? She would be more dependent upon, and less liable to gossip."

"Yes, I suppose so," she agreed, wondering a bit at his grasp of trifles.

"There is another matter,' he went on more seriously; "I want to tell you that I intend settling the half of my Northwest property upon you. It is all that I have at my disposal at present, although I suppose that, if all goes well, my father will make some arrangement for me. Of course, at the same time, I shall have a will in your favor prepared for me to sign after the marriage."

Mathilde began to realize how much she was going to accept from this man, who was all but a stranger to her.

She leaned forward impulsively.

"It is impossible that I should accept so much from you," she said quickly. "The will may be fair enough, though I hope—I am sure that you ought to—" she stammered and paused, and then went on desperately: "You must consider the claims of——"

"That is all attended to," he interrupted.

"Then I consent to the will, but I do not want, I will not have anything settled on me at present. I have quite sufficient for my own needs," she said rather proudly, "for you must remember," with a sad smile, "that what makes a very slim income makes ample pocket-money. I have nearly two hundred pounds a year," she added simply.

An amused smile lit Stewart's face. "You poor child! And you were going to try to live on that in Paris, having, I suppose, had all your life everything you fancied?"

There was a gentleness, almost tenderness, in his voice which somehow shook her composure, but she choked the passing weakness down, and answered in a matter-of-fact fashion:

"I could have done it. I have known several who did it on less."

"And grown old before your time, and dowdy and dreary. Well, no matter, now that the danger is past. You say that you cannot agree to this settlement, forgetting that it is a mere matter of business. If we carry, as we shall do, this affair to a successful conclusion, you will have secured a large fortune to me. This is a very small first-fruit on my part. You must look at it in that light."

"Then I should not have it before I earned it," she retorted more brightly.

"You are too logical. All I can say it, that I consider the arrangement only fair and right, and shall be much wounded if you refuse me my way in the matter. Now, will you consent?"

The keen eyes emphasized the demand, and almost to her own surprise, she found herself answering "Yes" in a passive fashion.

(To be continued.)

THE COMMON LADY-BIRD.

Few Are Aware of Her Services to Florists and Gardeners.

Everybody knows the common lady-bird, but not every one is aware of the immense services rendered by this insect to florists and gardeners. Most insects are harmful to vegetation, their larvae generally eating the leaves of whatever plant the eggs may be laid on, and it has been calculated that the larvae or caterpillars of some varieties of beetles eat a hundred thousand times their own weight of vegetable food before they attain their full size and begin to spin their cocoons.

The lady-bird, however, is an exception, for both the larvae and the beetle are carnivorous and feed on other insects, generally the aphis, which is so harmful to chrysanthemums and almost all other kinds of vegetation.

The lady-bug lays her eggs on the under side of the chrysanthemum leaf, and as soon as the larvae are hatched they begin to prowl about the leaves and stems of the plant, looking for aphis or any other insect smaller than themselves. The larvae simply hunt for food, but the full-grown lady-bug is a veritable tiger among the plant pests, and will tear and slay even after she has eaten all she can possibly swallow. One lady-bird will destroy all the aphis on a large chrysanthemum in two or three days. Not one will escape. The aphis seem to recognize her as their natural enemy, and, although they have never seen a lady-bug before, as soon as one lights on a branch they turn tail and run, with every appearance of the most abject terror. Sometimes, when closely pursued, they let go all hold and drop off the branch in the hope of getting away. But they never do, for, once on their trail, the lady-bug hunts them down and tears them to pieces, apparently out of sheer malignant sport.

There seems no doubt that the benefits conferred by this tigerish insect were recognized ages ago. The name lady-bug, or lady-bird, is a contraction of "our lady's bird," for in the traditional lore of Italy, France and Germany the insect is sacred to the Virgin Mary, and centuries ago German children were taught that to harm or kill one of these insects was a sin. The idea is still prevalent among children, for in nine cases out of ten when a lady-bird is caught it is at once released after a recitation of the rhyme beginning, "Lady-bird, lady-bird fly away home." In India, where the insects sometimes appear in considerable numbers, as they occasionally do also in Europe, they are so highly esteemed that in the folklore of the country when a lady-bird lights on any one he is immediately endowed with saintly virtues.

"Scot-Free."

The word "scot-free" is a survival from ancient Anglo Saxon. Scot in this sense comes from the old English word sceot, meaning a portion of tribute or taxation, and it is still in use in the Scandinavian languages to signify treasure. In modern English however, it occurs in only two expressions, the legal phrase, "to pay scot and lot," and the ordinary word "scot free."

There are different grades of oil-stones, hard and soft. The best oil to use on an oil-stone is paraffin; water is better on a hard stone.

To a depraved taste, sweet is bitter.—Spanish.

WOMEN'S INTERESTS

Picnics Good Way to Entertain.

A picnic is one of the most attractive forms of entertainment, especially where a hostess wishes to give a simple affair. As the success of a picnic depends on the attractiveness of the luncheon, care must be given to its choosing and packing. If it takes place in a woods, fresh fish, coffee, and potatoes cooked over a bonfire, besides being attractive edibles, contribute great fun. If the picnic takes place in a park, sandwiches, cold meats, salads, pickles, cakes, ice cream and lemonade should be chosen. Small rolls filled with lettuce, chopped olives, nuts, minced meats, keep fresh and are easily handled. Pickles, olives and chow chow are good appetizers and when put in bottles keep fresh. A large cake or small cakes baked the day before make attractive dessert. Though coffee is not readily heated, iced coffee and lemonade are cooling drinks.

It is well for the hostess to plan games while she and her helpers are setting the table. The table should be spread on the grass in true picnic style. An inexpensive tablecloth may be used, with a square of white oil cloth the same size to put underneath. In the center are placed the dishes, filled with sandwiches, olives, pickles, nuts, fruit and cake. Each place is set with a wooden plate, Japanese napkin, a knife, fork and spoons.

The picnic over, the hostess should be as particular about clearing the table as she would be in her own home. The crumbs can be fed to the birds. The wooden plates and napkins put back into the luncheon basket and destroyed at home.

A Cheerful Home.

A single bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day; one surly glance casts a shadow over the household. But a smile may light up the darkest and dreariest hours. No matter how humble the abode, if it is thus garnished with grace and kindness, the heart will turn lovingly toward it from the tumult of the world without. The gentle grace of the mother of such a home remains to be seen in her daughter and the fatherly kindness finds its echo in the nobility and courtesy of the sons. On the other hand, from an unhappy, misgoverned home, go forth those who will make other homes unhappy and perpetuate the sadness, contentions and strife of their own early lives.—Agricultural Epitomist.

The Midsummer Girl.

She tired of the drooping hat that presses so heavily on her perspiring forehead these torrid midsummer days, yet in her efforts to render herself more comfortable this wise girl does not lose sight of Dame Fashion. She knows that, black hats never were so popular, so she takes a look around and finally buys a graceful wide brimmed shape in black lace braid. She drapes it in voluminous folds of soft black satin around the crown—a simple but effective and becoming trimming. She buys a couple of stunning hat pins of brilliants, and instead of wearing the hat down over the eyes as fashion has decreed in the recent past, she daringly pints it back—off her face. Thus she bows to fashion in wearing the black hat, but openly defies her in the method of wearing it.

Health and Beauty Hints.

For unbroken chilblains rubbing with common table salt is one of the best remedies known. Add just enough water to make the salt damp.

The finger nails should be manicured once each week, then if they are scrubbed and polished every day it should keep them in good order.

A fine-tooth comb, valuable for certain purposes, is capable of injuring the scalp if used unwisely, for the tiny points, close together, irritate the skin and, far from removing the dandruff, as many persons think, will increase it.

For the circulation of the blood in the scalp a vigorous brushing in the sun will prove wonderfully helpful. It brings new shimmer and color, and all the unnatural oils are banished by the warm rays, so that the coiffure will be soft and fluffy.

Scour the Irons.

One point in which the novice in ironing often fails lies in not having the irons perfectly clean before beginning work. To do really good work begin by scouring the irons thoroughly with soap and water. They must not be dried on the fire, as this creates an immediate rust, which works off on the clothes.

Definition of a Lady.

A prize offered by the Gentlewoman (London) for the best definition of a lady was won by the following effort: "To be a lady means, rightly, to be a gentlewoman who shows by her every word and action a sweet and gentle dignity, with a gracious charm of manner. A woman whose heart is pure and true, who is tender toward all suffering, who sympathizes with those in trouble, and is ever ready to give that which costs her some effort and self-denial. A lady thinks no work derogatory, and no one is deemed too low to receive courtesy and kindness. She is pure and good in every detail of life, a true friend and a 'ministering angel' in sorrow and in sickness."

POPULAR BEACH AND BATHING SUITS.

Comfort for Plain Women.

Plain women exist, and form a definite factor in our social economy. Not all of us are blessed with good features, soft eyes, a fine figure and a clear complexion. Some of us are born with dull skins, wide mouths and snub noses, and not all the arts of dress and toilet can make us pretty, or even presentable.

But all the same, plain women live and thrive, and now and then make brilliant marriages, says Mrs. Fitzroy Stewart in the Strand. In fact, one has only to use one's eyes to see that some ugly women have for men quite a weird power of attraction. History teaches us this; for we are told, in several instances, of uncomely women who have ruled the destinies of men and nations.

Catherine of Russia and Mme. de Maintenon had no looks; and Mary, Queen of Scots, who has gone down to fame as a beauty, appears in her pictures as thin, small-eyed, and hard-featured. Indeed, only one portrait is said to exist in which she is shown as fair-haired and lovely, and this hangs in Dalkeith palace, and belongs to the Duke of Baccleuch.

The Family Washing.

To a boiler of water add one cup washing fluid and one bar of good soap. While heating sort the clothes, making four piles—best white in one, second best white in the second, common white in the third, and colored in the fourth. Put the best clothes in the washer, adding one and one-half pails of hot water from the boiler, and then enough cold water to cover. Turn the washer wheel from fifty to a hundred times. Wring out the clothes and put into the boiler. If needed, add more water to boiler. Let clothes boil well. While the first boil wash the second. Take the first from the boiler and put in second, adding one-half cup fluid. Treat all the white in the same way. Then wash the colored without boiling. Put clean cold water in washer. Wash all the clothes through. Then rinse in the washer by giving a few turns to the wheel. Starch without blueing and hang out. Should be done in less than two hours.

The hat reproduced here, while not being a strictly tailored model, would be appropriate for wear with that style of dress. For the development of this roughly woven basket straw in mahogany brown was used. The shape was trimmed by a stiff band of silk, richly embroidered in gold and the different shades from thence to the brown of the straw and bordered by plain silk in the deepest shade. This band was adjusted in waved lines, the two pointed ends meeting—but not joining—on the right near the front. A sweep of handsome algrettes in tones of brown and gold completed the garniture.

A new fancy is the large soft wing, the pointed tip of which runs into a broad, stiff quill. The quill is of the same color as the wing, but it is usually covered with big dots of a contrasting color.

Strings, usually not serving any practical purpose, but caught up and knotted in some graceful fashion, appear upon a number of most picturesque broad-brimmed hats this season.

Shantung as a trimming and as a material for stretching over hats is a feature of many of the Paris novelties. It is used for facing panels and for lining coats.

Trimming for the Newest Suits.

Here is the model of postively the prettiest, daintiest thing in linen suits designed for women this year. The trimming is made of flat folds of the same material stitched on in the form of braiding. Some of these dainty summer clothes show the pattern in close, elaborate designs in spots, while others are decorated all over with long flowing lines, loops and curves. These suits in white, linen color, and dainty shades make ideal accompaniment for the ever popular flower hats.

Value of Little Virtues.

Do not be troubled because you have not great virtues. God made a thousand spears of grass where he made one tree. The earth is fringed and carpeted not with forests, but with grasses. Only have enough of little virtues and common fidelities, and you need not mourn because you are neither a hero nor a saint.

No Place for a Flirt.

The girl who gets work in an office for the purpose of chasing a man and capturing a lover or a live husband, is of no great service to her employer. Her chances for advancement are slight, and she might better spend her time at home helping to do the dishes. The caprices of the flirt are very apparent as air.

Her Reason.

"The reason that Belle Married Billie," said Lillian,
"Was simply because
He was rated a million.

"The panic came on'
In a very short season;
Then Bill lost his cash,
And Belle lost her reason."
—Puck.

Comment Unnecessary.

"Your womanhood will gain nothing by suffrage and is losing every day in its dignity and its true influence by the hysterical clamor which is employed in the pursuit of this chimera," said Bishop Doane of New York to the graduating class in a noted school. Comment seems unnecessary.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Porch Clothesline.

If you have a back porch or any convenience of posts put galvanized screw hooks on inside of each post; cut your line of either rope or wire for the distances between, tying loops in the ends in each, which can be easily hooked off and on. Put away and keep clean when not in use.

Beans Brighten Burners.

Boil lamp burners in the water that beans have been boiled in.
